"Love is a verb"

— Buckminster Fuller

There are parts of speech and parts of people, each part working toward a unified whole. We enter and leave our lives as individuals; in the time between, we strive to connect.

High school is the sum of its parts: academics, sports, arts, culture, community, interests and religion. The whole created can nurture or negate, depending on the individuals creating the environment. School can be a noun or a verb, a thing or an action.

Mitty's goal is the enhancement of the individual within a loving community. But neither is a goal a noun; it is an action, a constant striving and renewal, and Mitty defines itself annually, evaluating, weighing, maintaining within the flux. Because life is too precious to be a noun. Our hope is not for stasis; our hope is for growth.

Mitty's a verb.

Glen and Jody Hoop (right) conclude their ceremony with a kiss. The Jewish faith is actively practiced by a number of students and staff.

Mike Castro (above) pumps iron, one of many parts of the sports program. Activity programs featured Spirit Week (top) which included this award-winning display by the seniors entitled "1984 Leagues Under the Sea." The Police not only received acclaim as one of Mitty's favorite groups, so did their album "Synchronicity."

According to Webster, it is "a place or institution for teaching and learning." But to Mitty students, school is much more: it is an intermingling of religion, academics, culture, sports, and community.

The above definition is derived from the responses of students to a recent survey. A random survey of more than 200 students offers significant insights into Mitty High.

An initial observation is that although 63% of those polled are Catholic, there is religious diversity on campus. 16% of the respondents are Protestant, 9% practice no religion, 2% are Jewish, and 10% be-campus. Almost every racial background is represented including Italian, Hispanic, Afro-American, German, and Irish. 58% state they are involved in cultural activities on campus, while only 24% claim to be involved in ethnic activities in the community. Of those polled, 71% say they feel "good" to "very good" at Mitty. This indicates a healthy cultural atmosphere at Mitty and a place "where students from all backgrounds can feel comfortable," summarizes senior Charity Packer.

The importance of sports at Mitty is represented by the fact that 74% of those polled participate in after-school sports.

Over 200 asked: S: survey say S:

long to some other faith. Out of those who stated they were raised in a religion not listed, most were non-denominational, Islamic, or Buddhist.

Although only 67% admit they still practice their faith, 61% state they are involved with religious activities on campus. These events range from participation in mass and attending retreats to being a member of LIFE, a Living In Faith Experience. The data suggests that religion at Mitty goes beyond "practicing" one's faith. "I attend mass and retreats as much to be with my peers as to experience religion," verifies a junior, Andy Vanyo.

The academic section of the poll reveals that 73% enjoyed the educational proportion of school, with an overwhelming majority choosing math as their favorite subject. Such evidence may indicate students at Mitty realize the importance of this field in the world today. "With computers and technology, it's hard to survive without a good knowledge of math," summarizes Kevin Smith, a junior.

Even more revealing of the academic trends at Mitty is that 83% of the students polled plan to attend a four-year college. Such a high percentage of college bound students, according to counselor Bernie LeRoy, reflects "a strong academic as well as career-oriented atmosphere." Verifying this opinion is that 69% of the respondents feel the atmosphere at Mitty has a positive influence on their academic achievement.

Another observation from the survey is the cultural diversity which is present on

Of these, 47% state they spend 3-5 hours on their sport a day. 61% of the respondents claim they intend to continue their involvement in sports when they go to college. "Sports is such an important part of my life that I cannot see myself not continuing it in college," verifies Sean DeMonner, a junior.

When it comes to Mitty as a community, an overwhelming 82% of the students polled feel the school is spirited. This spirit is not only reflected in that 60% attend school activities such as rallies, games, dances, and concerts, but also in that 64% note their parents are involved in the community through such organizations as Parent's Club, the Booster Club, and the Advisory Board. Such involvement indicates "a great pride in school and feeling of community," stated Lani Miller, assistant to the administrator.

As a whole, the results of the survey indicate one important factor at Mitty, and that is involvement. Students appear to be involved in every aspect of the school from religion and academics to sports. "Mitty is a community of giving and sharing, caring, and growing. It is a place created by the involvement of everyone," concluded Shelly Alexanders an alumna of the class of 1981.

...ing used to fancy... and... striped jacket... his name. His group, the Police (right), dominates the red, white, and blue with its red, yellow, and blue. Def Leppard's "Pyromania" will rock on for ages. Mitty's most popular album (below) includes "Photograph" and "Rock of Ages". Physical Education teacher Pat Ersepke (bottom) has a fast-pace pulse from reading romance novels.

Interests

Mouth-watering, tongue-tingling, and sense-stimulating delicacies: Mitty has a small Oriental population, but big Chinese food appeal (top). Russ Ford and Ron Mifsud demonstrate the contemporary look characterized by skinny ties, pleated pants, and loafers (above). Prince whined about his little Corvette (left). Why? It costs about $20,000.

While the penetrating tones of "Every Breath You Take" stream through the window of the Little Red Corvette, the teens inside, dressed in Flashdance sweatshirts and O.P. shorts, screech to a stop in front of a bold billboard proclaiming "RISKY BUSINESS NOW PLAYING." Mitty kids follow the fad but focus on their favorites.

A questionnaire sent out to two hundred students in several English classes last September identified lifestyles outside Mitty walls and preferences in various teen interests.

Musical tastes fluctuate as much as the notes in a song. Yet the tide is overwhelmingly turned to rock 'n roll. New-wave sweeps over the school as second choice, and soul is a hearty third. Punk and heavy metal have their daring defenders, but some conservatives adhere to jazz, blues, country, and folk. Nevertheless, general tastes reflect the mood of the era. The 80's is a decade of awareness about war and weapons, demonstrated by songs such as Prince's "1999." The mouths behind the music receive alldears attention as well. The Police disturbed law and order during their jam-packed, speedy sell-out concerts last summer. Other favorite faces include Def Leppard, Men at Work, Led Zeppelin, and Duran Duran. The all-time veterans, the Beatles, are not forgotten.

A constant shift in the charts shows the whims of human nature. Albums and songs at the top of the ladder must survive the constant shakedown from competitors. Def Leppard's "Pyromania," which means a compulsion to set things on fire, receives the most Mitty applause. "Synchronicity," by the Police, defines the mysterious but appealing intellect of Sting, the lead singer. Michael Jackson's "Thriller" is the record-breaking, five-hit champion. While most songs are popular only a short time, a few remain number one for weeks on end. National statistics last year spotlighted Michael Jackson's "Billie Jean" and "Beat It," "Flashdance," by Irene Cara, and the Police's "Every Breath You Take." Videos do a lot of promotion.

Movies have grown since the silent motion picture days of the early 1900s. Yet the same themes appear and reappear. Mitty students especially enjoy science-fiction, comedy, and horror films. Countless curtains opened to "Return of the Jedi," the multi-billion dollar conclusion to the "Star Wars" trilogy. "Risky Business" was another summer teenage attraction. "Flashdance" triggered a new physical-fitness look. "E.T." "Pol-tergeist," and "Tootsie" received warm approval.

With season premieres out every fall, TV networks are also battling for audiences. Mitty preferences again reflect popular and personal tastes. Mr. T's heroism in "The A-Team" wins the most votes. Yet some students prefer shows that spoof everyday life. Comedies such as "Facts of Life," "Square Pegs," and "Three's Company" lighten up student life. Some new sitcoms seem "desperate" to Maryanne Sinay, a junior. "But some are pretty good, like 'Cheers'." On the dramatic side, there is "Dynasty," "Fame," and "Hill Street Blues." Nostalgics reminisce by watching "Twilight Zone" and "Leave It To Beaver." Soap opera addicts weep over "General Hospital" during summer and on classroom TVs during school.

What do most bookworms burrow their noses into? Romance novels. "It's the teenage phase," suggests sophomore Ker-ei Shyh. But readers also enjoy classics, mystery, horror, and adventure stories. Louis L'Amour, Stephen King, and Edgar Allan Poe are some authors singled out for their style.

Mitty students like what's comfortable. Casual and preppie outfits are the favorite fashions. Some like the expensive, designer look, notably Calvin Klein. Others prefer the punk, new-wave, and Flashdance cuts and colors. Then there are students satisfied with their polo shirts, Levi's 501's, and ESPRIT sportswear. For most, being fashionable means choosing appropriate styles that enhance their features.

America is indeed a melting pot. Foreign foods are rated above the nation's fast foods and mom's apple pie. Chinese, Mexican, and Italian food are the recurrent responses. Palatal desires include gourmet, pizza, and junk food. Sinay loves Greek and Roman food, anything really spicy.

With so many students living far away, Mitty treats the car as a status symbol and a necessity. The predominant dream cars are the Mercedes-Benz and the Corvette. Small compacts such as the Volkswagen Bug and the Rabbit are admired. Porsches and Ferraris are also popular. Datsun 4x4's provide heavy-duty action. Still others prefer the elegance of a Lamborghini, or even a Rolls Royce.

Styles sway to the beat of a different mood constantly. Mitty teens know what's hot and what's not for them. Martin voices the individuality. "I don't compromise my good judgment only to be in style."

The Calculus Advanced Placement students lean against any available furniture in Judy James' house during their exam review session. Marty Procaccio's students blink sleepy eyes at midnight over United States A.P. texts speckled with pizza crumbs. Mitty's staff and students are constantly climbing the academic ladder.

The school aims at development and improvement in areas that need it, and emphasis on satisfactory programs. Heeding the WASC Accrediting Commission's suggestions, five Apple Computers were purchased through grants from the Stella Kester Trust Fund, Peggy Ervin was appointed the Business Department head, and regular department meetings were scheduled for minimum days. Teachers and students respond readily to change and growth.

It takes a lot E to make the grad

Mitty is among the top 25% of high schools in the Santa Clara County. SAT scores are at the national norms in verbal areas, and above-average in math. Nearly 95% of all Mitty students attend a community college or four-year university. Many surpass the graduation requirements for their class. One-half of most seniors have attained the necessary number of credits by their first semester. About forty percent of every class make the honor roll and the principal's every year, and the numbers are growing.

Mitty is a dynamic community, asserts Vice Principal Jack Ramage. High schools must reflect colleges and career demands in today's society, and Mitty has presented a clear image. Academic classes, especially writing and math in the valley, are squeezing out once-favorite subjects such as social science or the arts. "It's a sign of the times," Ramage says. "We must stand up above the pack." Course-selection see-saws between the basics and personal freedom, and Mitty's big "menu" gives students the choice. The growth of the Business Department illustrates the response to change, as the need for word-processing and other skills runs the gamut from secretaries to executives. Five new teachers were hired this year. About 35% of the sixty teachers have an M.A. degree, and one, Phil Miller, has a degree in pharmacology. Mitty's growing population is characterized by a successively bigger freshman class, but admissions will level off in a few years.

Teachers and their methods are essential ingredients in the academic formula. Brother Joe Hartzler works with other religion teachers. He believes their individual personalities contribute to the faith-sharing in and outside of class.

While freshman and sophomore English concentrate on structure, the electives focus on "style, content, and analysis," according to Sandra Mack. Mitty offers Spanish and French because of the greater demand for these foreign languages. Brother Tom Spring's Algebra II/Trigonometry class, especially, encourages the practical use of math; the book often applies its axioms to the "real world." Advanced Placement in science is not offered because the teachers find the program too test-oriented. Freshmen global studies provides a wide background for future courses spotlighting the United States and other subjects. Anne Egan, Social Studies Department Head, frankly states that the budget does not allow for a definite sophomore program, but again, these students can take courses intended for higher grade levels.

But how does the student feel about all this? The pressure from parents, society, and the job market is forcing them to adapt also. Incoming freshmen must accept the increased requirements as an indication of college trends. Ironically, these newcomers are already concerned about careers and the competition. "Students may not love to learn," says Joe Pirzynski, head of the Counseling and Guidance Department, "but they know that courses are related to their future." Students are willing to sacrifice breaks for brains. 80% of the rooms are used during 5th period lunch. Many sophomores such as Molly Parks had classes 1st through 8th period last year. A large majority considered Mitty a positive influence, and over 90% were destined for college. Math, English, and science, respectively, won by landslides as favorite subjects.

Mitty students are not only flexible but enthusiastic. Sean DeMonner is a junior with a lot of honors-course experience. "The Mitty environment is an excellent place to grow because it successfully combines a challenging academic curriculum with numerous social activities," he says. Despite her heavy workload, junior Marilyn Reiss participates in the Academic Decathlon's "different learning approach." Cindy Novak, a freshman, follows the footsteps of her two older sisters. She likes the staff, the open-campus policy, the responsibility, and the grading system.

Schools and students never know how they will be tested; they can only prepare for these challenges. Mitty may not be a straight-A school yet, but, Ramage affirms, "we are past our infancy."

Culture

An album (right) surrounded by silk Iranian cloth depicts the ancient Persians with their long black hair and attached eyebrows. The game chogan (far right), similar to hockey, is depicted in this painting on tusk.

“It is a mixture of people from different ethnic and economic backgrounds,” states Josie Reguero, a Spanish teacher.

Students as well as faculty come from vastly different backgrounds and experiences, and each culture adds to Mitty’s “Richness,” either through their active participation in cultural events or just by “being who and what they are,” comments Reguero.

The most visible ethnic activity on campus for the past two years has been Cinco de Mayo. A celebration of a victory of the Mexican people over the French army at the city of Puebla in the year 1862, Cinco de Mayo is celebrated at Mitty with food, Spanish dancers, and a Mariachi Band.

“It is an event which builds community by teaching about different cultures,” explains Reguero. The Mexican-American community, parents, member of the Hindu religion, each month she participates in Aarti, a food offering to their God. Also, there are certain yearly celebrations, such as Krsna’s Birthday which she celebrates with other Hindus in the bay area. Niyo’s culture and religion have an effect on what she gives and receives at Mitty. She is comfortable at Mitty and enjoys “learning of another religion.” In return, the fellow students at Mitty have the opportunity “to learn of a culture that they previously knew little about,” noted Kevin Smith, a junior.

Junior Christine Bocanegra, a Mexican-American, is involved in cultural activities in her community. As well as assisting with Cinco de Mayo on campus, she recently became involved in Amigos de las Americas, a program training youth to participate in health projects in Latin America. While preparing her for her chosen field of behavioral science, teachers, and Spanish students are involved, which helps people “learn of other cultures, and thus adds to the unique cultural experience,” added Reguero. Cinco de Mayo is such a success, Reguero hopes other ethnic days can be celebrated.

A melting pot of many cultures

The cultural experience at Mitty goes beyond celebrations. The varied cultures on campus are reflected in dress and other activities. Hispanic students at Mitty often wear clothes illustrative of their culture, as do the Islamic and European students. Mehrnaz and Farnaz Jamali, sisters from Iran, display their cultural ties through their unique Eastern jewelry. Other students choose to represent themselves through hair styles. Still others reflect their culture through their music. From soul to punk, all musical varieties are present at Mitty. “Several students who come to our dances from other schools are amazed by the different types of music that are played, especially the soul music,” states senior Gina Bonanno.

“The most subtle yet powerful cultural influence at Mitty is the culture practiced at home which the individuals carry with them on campus,” reflected Betsy Townsend, a junior.

Junior Niyo Kachalia, an Asian Indian, actively participates in cultural activities at home and within her community. A Bocanegra also feels that Amigos will help her to improve her Spanish and learn more about the culture which is a part of her life. Although she felt some racial tensions in her freshman year, she generally feels that Mitty is a “community that extends over racial barriers to work as a whole.”

Michelle Alexander, a junior, is a black also involved with her culture. She is attempting to join Jack and Jill, a peer group for black youths that discusses pertinent issues in their lives. In order to join the program, one must find a family that is willing to sponsor you. Alexander is in the process of doing a task which often takes a long time to accomplish. She, like Bocanegra, felt some racial tension in her freshman year because of “the small size of the ethnic groups represented.” She feels now, however, that Mitty is a community that stresses “equality even though the ethnic groups are not extremely large.”

In general, at Mitty there is “a healthy exchange of different cultures, and thus ideas,” summarizes Patrick Fitzgerald, a senior.

ART is a glamorous experience. "Glamour? In the theatre? Bruised legs, extreme physical and emotional exhaustion, and being the idol of twelve-year-old kids. That's as glamorous as it gets right now," says Brandy Parris, a senior seriously considering a career in acting.

At this time in their lives, most artists at Mitty find little glamour but a lot of promise in their talents.

Brandy is one of numerous students who came to high school with previous training in art. She had gained experience with the stage and play procedure by performing in plays and working on various technical crews. She has been in Mitty Theatrical Arts productions, her special and down to the basic beauties of things."

After college, when recognition is established, Einar does not want to follow popular trends, but set the fads. This ultimate goal may come true for Einar as his talents improve and his expressions shine with pure originality.

Fads are meant to be set by young apprentices. Imagination and creativity show through styles of their own making. For Nick Dubois, it is comic book and fantasy characters set in a futuristic time frame. "In the past, you have a guideline or reference point for your work. In the future, you can create your own world for the comic," comments Dubois.

talents helping her win leading roles. "I perform because I can't express myself as well any other way, and acting is a way to show how I feel," says Parris.

A sophomore musician, Franco Finstad, also enjoys the free-flowing expression achieved through art.

When Franco began in the sixth grade, he learned to balance his time effectively so that he could expand on school and music at the same time. Practice, one of the most important aspects of trumpet playing, has become involuntary to him.

"My talent is definitely a result of self-discipline and will power," explains Finstad. "There are no short cuts in art."

Carolyn Brilla, a senior, is also very involved with music, only her voice is her artistic talent and ticket to fame.

Since her first performance in "Oklahoma," she has been in more than nine other plays. Brilla finds she can use her voice best in cheery songs. Often though, she writes poetry and invents tunes to accompany them.

She hopes to enhance her talents by being in plays, taking classes, and having voice lessons. "It's the real me," she says. "I can look deep inside and tell what's there without saying it."

"Personal pizzaz" is the expression of emotions through any art form. For a musician, the mood of the music makes each bar unique. In painting, Einar Finstad, a senior, poses a personal style of "realism, yet loose and simple" on his artistic creations. His art works reach for the more pleasant aspects of color and design.

Einar's paintings and sketches depict landscape scenes, mountains, or city streets concentrating on the shadows, sun, and natural forms. His style proves versatile as he can disregard the perfection in nature and make "things simplified director, or writer, Nick could apply his creativity.

To improve his style, he takes time out to attend and participate in conventions in San Diego and San Francisco. "It's a good way to find out how professionals like your work." With the continuous variations and characters, Nick hopes to establish his comic book talents in the world of art.

College is usually a dream, something far away and unreal. To the seniors, another four-year commitment is a scary reality. Often, though, they look for scholarships to take some of the burden off their families. For those students who are advanced in the arts, their talents are finally beginning to pay off.

Beginners in the arts that come to Mitty find the classes most helpful. However, not all forms of art have instructional courses. Dancers, for instance, find no classes to help them. They must take lessons outside of school.

Charlotte Yeh, a senior, began ballet dancing two years ago. When she came to Mitty, she continued her after-school classes.

"I saw a friend of mine dancing, and it was so beautiful that I wanted to dance also," says Charlotte.

She has a hectic schedule, trying to fit in school, homework, ballet lessons, and projects. Using her knowledge of dance, she hopes to be able to perform in many varying roles.

Both beginners and advanced artists find their place in Mitty's art community. "Many students are not recognized for their ability," comments Mazor. In the future, they hope to have art shows that would make known the extensive talents of Mitty's artistic students.

Community

“The Mitty community teaches you about the needs of people and shows you how you can help others in those times of need,” states Laura Johnson, an alumna of the class of 1983.

Johnson uses what she learned at Mitty in her everyday life. Last year she worked with the Red Cross in Alviso providing relief to many of the flood victims, as well as serving as an instructor for the Red Cross. As an alumna, she has begun working on a medivac unit as an Emergency Medical technician.

There are other ideas on what the Mitty community is. Some see it as Johnson does, a community striving to help those in need. Others see it as an embodiment of the Marianist philosophy.

The spirit at Mitty is also perceived as a product of the work done by the administration and faculty, as well as the students, who work towards creating a feeling of involvement. Others see Mitty as a sharing experience of the school that includes parents and alumnus.

The feeling of togetherness can be observed in different forms, according to Lani Miller, administrative assistant. Miller sees a prime illustration of the community spirit in the way “people come forth to help their fellow human beings.” Whether there has been a natural disaster, such as the flooding of Alviso last year, or a personal problem such as the death of a friend or loved one, Miller observes that almost everyone attempts to help as much as possible.

Since its opening in 1964, Mitty has been “committed to the basic Marianist philosophy,” Miller stated. Jack Ramage, Father Rodney De Martini, and Miller feel the Mitty Community has developed a greater awareness of the realization of love and community using Mary, the Mother of Jesus, as a model.

The faculty also works towards maintaining the Mitty community, both in their everyday interactions with students and in the deeper relationships often established during after-school activities, the faculty assists in creating a “togetherness,” noted Tania Tilley, a junior. This can be observed in school events, intramural sports, organizations and social activities. Where teachers and students work closely together “everyone gets to know each other really well,” stated Andy Vanyo, a junior. In Cinco de Mayo, organizer Josie Reguero feels the community is brought closer together because of “the overwhelming help I have received from both the students and teachers.”

Students also help to “strengthen the bonds that students feel towards the community,” noted Leann Carr, a junior. Student Government, through activities such as jog-a-thon, dances and concerts, brings people together while at the same time raising money for the school. The community service center established this year also helps “to create a feeling of involvement,” observed Charity Packer, a senior. Headed by Gary Cramton, the community service center helps to match Mitty students with agencies in need of volunteers, as at Camp Campbell each year, where students serve as counselors.

For LIFE, composed of students who have spent part of their summer on a retreat, the major goal is to “assist in the spiritual growth of Mitty,” observed Brother Spring. At the beginning of the year, this goal was realized in the opening mass prepared by LIFE members, which, according to Virginia James, was a “real nice mass with a nice theme and a great spirit in the air.”

Parents also are “greatly involved in the development of the Mitty community” cited Darrel Weichenthal, former president of the Advisory Council. By being involved in the parent’s and booster’s clubs or just by serving in a car pool, parents are an important part of the spirit at Mitty, observed Ramage. They support all aspects of Mitty: sports, academics, and cultural events.

At Cinco de Mayo, “much of the food was donated or prepared by parents,” stated Reguero. Some of the money raised for the sports program is also gathered by parents. Parents assist in creating community “by supporting the philosophies and goals of Mitty,” summarized Terri Bekooy, a graduate of the class of 1981.

The alumnus also play part in the Mitty Community, noted Miller. “They come back year after year to share their triumphs with the Mitty community,” she added. This year, several alumni of the class of 1983 returned to visit Mitty, including Shelia Gorham and Laura Johnson. Both came back to talk to old friends and visit with teachers. Others come back years later to be married, have their children baptized, and, in general, share with the Mitty community for the rest of their life.

“The spirit at Mitty is evident in everyone involved with the community,” summarized Tilley. “It’s the greatest feeling of all . . . the togetherness here.”

by Lori Weichenthal

Coaches give up time for it, students put off homework for it, parents sacrifice evenings for it, others volunteer for it. Their common goal is the building of the sports program.

It is the players, the coaches, the parents, and the spectators, all working together that form Mitty sports.

For some individuals coaching is their way of contributing. "I really believe in the program," notes varsity tennis coach Joan Sullivan. Five years ago when Sullivan started coaching boys' tennis she had only nine players. This past year, thirty-five boys came out for the team. Sullivan believes the program itself is the reason for the increase in players. She feels the athletes look at the program as something in which they can achieve as well as carry mark of a successful team is one that is positive and works together. Kistler enjoys running with the other athletes but also finds it a challenge.

Athlete Elizabeth Nichols feels the sports program is good and spirit is there. She also feels there is a strong sense of unity among the athletes. Nichols believes each player is a building block that supports the rest of the people on the team. The key for a successful team is working hard to try and win, but most importantly doing their best. Nichols is involved in sports because of the spirit and feeling of camaraderie.

Mitty's sports program also gets a lot of support from the sidelines. Victor Pekar-cik is head student trainer of all the male and female interscholastic sports. His job on later in life. Sullivan feels there is a real caring for each individual and that some of the best friendships develop here.

Mitty's Athletic Director, coach Martin Procaccio, sees a determination within each athlete that he deems incredible. When Procaccio first started coaching cross country and track, a girls' team did not exist. Since then, due to avid interest by female athletes, a girls' team has been added and continues to expand. Procaccio sees a strong camaraderie amongst the athletes and a commitment to do well for one another. Procaccio lauds the parents for their continued support of Mitty's sports.

Over the past thirteen years, coach Peter Petrinovich has seen many changes. He has coached varsity football and girl's junior varsity softball and has seen Mitty's female athletes emerge to become one of the top teams in the CCS (Central Coast Section). Petrinovich feels the sports program is superior. Petrinovich has been at Mitty all these years because of the kids. He has a high esteem for the Mitty parents because the students are a reflection of their parents.

Others participate in the sports program at Mitty through their athletic abilities. Athlete Kim Kistler feels the sports at Mitty are hard work but worth it. Kistler enjoys running cross country and track because it gives her the opportunity to meet a variety of people she would not be able to meet in classes. She believes the is to take care of and prevent injuries among the athletes. Pekar-cik feels there is a mutual respect between the trainer and the athletes both as friends and teammates. He believes that good sports-manship is always number one. Pekar-cik believes it is playing for a cause and all striving for something that brings the teams together. Pekar-cik feels it is important to set goals before each game and try to achieve them.

Another part of the sideline activity is the statistician. Patty Corsiglia's job is to take down all the statistics of the game. Corsiglia became a stat girl because most of her friends were on the team and she wanted to show her support. "You get a good feeling. The athletes respect you more because they know you are a part of what they are doing."

Another aspect of the sports program is the support from the parents. The Mitty Booster Club has been here as long as the school has, but was reorganized three years ago. Jim Hansell, president of the Booster Club, believes the sports program at Mitty is good but there is room for improvement. He would like to help the school get more equipment to be able to participate in the top of its league. The purpose of the Booster Club is to raise funds for all the athletic clubs.

The sports program is a combination of efforts aimed beyond the physical development of athletes. As one component of the Mitty community it integrates with the academic and the religious. It is one facet of the high school experience. "There is a heck of a lot more to school than playing football which lasts three months a year," notes Petrinovich.

"Can we accomodate agnostics, Jews, and Catholics? I think we can."

— Bishop Pierre Du Maine

It's been a nineteen-year search for Mitty's religious identity, but it's within sight.

Father Rodney De Martini is instrumental in Mitty's search for its religious self. Present religious concerns are in no way an attempt to sway students toward Catholicism, rather a fulfillment of Mitty's duty to inform both faculty and students on what it means to be Catholic. De Martini concedes that for some these facts about the Catholic Church will remain on purely an intellectual level, while others will want to learn how to integrate it into their lives.

Steven Herrera, religion teacher and Mitty alumnus, agrees with De Martini's assessment of Mitty's responsibility to its tion is to instruct Catholics in their faith," she notes, "then it is imperative that teachers both support that faith and live it as best they can, tough though it may be."

Michelle Sahami, one of several Mitty students of Moslem upbringing, looks forward to learning about the Catholic faith by attending masses and other such religious activities. This enthusiasm, however, is not shared by all. Campus Ministry, headed by Peggy Schrader, hopes to interest students by providing unique and interesting liturgies and retreat programs that will develop positive faith experience. Schrader does sense some fear and anger by both students and faculty about getting involved in the faith dimension of the school.

"Just because they have rejected the Church because of past negative experiences does not mean they need to reject all faith experiences," says Schrader. She is religious identity.

"There is a move to have strict requirements, but then that was only because people went too far to just teach psychology in their classes and not enough religious content," comments Herrera who has observed a move toward more conservative religious ideals, particularly in the past year.

Anne Egan, faculty member and Mitty graduate, concurs with Herrera's evaluation of Mitty's religious past and feels that Mitty is religiously at just the right point; she feels an attempt to move toward a strictly "Catholic" policy such as that adopted by other schools will result in a feeling of restriction both by students and faculty. Egan noted teachers are being made increasingly aware of the importance of the obligation to Mitty's "Catholic" identity.

"We seem to be in this wave of trying to identify ourselves more as Catholic with a capital 'C' and that makes the faculty more aware of their obligation as the liaison person between the administration and the students." Egan sees the faculty fulfilling their obligation to Mitty's Catholicity as role models rather than leading them into church during an activity period.

Tensions, have been made prevalent by the search for Mitty's Catholic identity. Pressure, caused by these tensions, makes some uncomfortable while others feel it is the first step in the right direction.

Patricia Bowers believes a Catholic school teacher's primary responsibility lies in the promotion of that belief. The notion that is also very strong in Bowers' mind is the idea of the teacher providing an unimpeachable role model.

"If the primary role of Catholic educa-quick to point out, however, that the freedom of choice at Mitty is essential and must remain an integral part of the community.

Schrader has, however, observed this year a greater willingness of both students and faculty to get involved with the school at a more religious level. She further points out that each faculty member, as an employee of a Catholic high school, has a three-fold responsibility: to look at their own faith lives, encourage students to look at their faith, and give students the freedom to make faith choices in their lives.

As with the faculty, the Mitty student body is comprised of a conglomeration of religious beliefs. Some students feel that with the great freedom at Mitty the Catholic identity of the school is not as developed as they had hoped for or expected.

"This is a Catholic school so there ought to be more religion, not just religion classes. Right now it seems like only the name is Catholic," suggests Farnaz Jamali, who emigrated from Iran in August of 1983. As Jamali sees it, Mitty as a Catholic school does not promote its identity to the extent that it should.

While the majority of the students seem to notice the lack of religious conviction at Mitty, they do enjoy the freedom that has been the school's trademark throughout the years.

"I feel no pressure at all. I don't like feeling pressured into a religion that is not mine," says Richard Klein who is Jewish by birth but now considers himself lapsed. "Mitty is a school in which religious decisions are constantly being re-evaluated," concurs Patrick Fitzgerald, a Mitty senior, "not a school in which ideals are blindly accepted."

Penny Lane in concert

Beatles beat brings back memories

Britannia ruled the stage for one night. Penny Lane's visit in September brought a nostalgic close to Spirit Week. Even for those not part of the Beatles era, the rhythm and style of their music encompassed the hearts of many music lovers.

"My older sister lived during the Beatles era and it seemed like a lot of excitement," stated senior Tricia Zamora. "I imagine I would have been a Beatles groupie just like she was."

Although student and faculty participation was widespread at the school assembly, the night concert did not receive the expected success. Mitty's rivalry game against Bellarmine was held the same night, and the 30-0 loss lowered spirits.

Parent participation also lacked a the concert. When Fallon approached Parent's Club during the summer, he believed students would enjoy such a concert but poor publicity diminished the success of parental participation.

"Penny Lane gave an exhilarating performance to those who attended," commented Marcia and Mike Doyle, two parents who enjoyed the concert. Penny Lane, a group that began a year ago, brought back the music and character of the Beatles. The group consists of three brothers, David (Paul McCartney), Victor (George Harrison), and Jim (John Lennon) Campanaro and a friend, Joe (Ringo Starr) Cintonino. The Campanaro brothers have always had the Beatles spirit. As youngsters, "We'd (the boys) get up on the fireplace and pretend to play," commented Victor Campanaro in an interview with Bill O'Driscoll of the Gazette/Journal, Reno, Nevada.

Today, though, the Beatles spirit is more alive because the dream of the Campanaro brothers is a reality. Penny Lane gives the appearance of the Beatles by imitating the styles of the era. Through constructive criticism and positive feedback from the many audiences they have performed for, the group learned and improved.

The opening act began with the traditional look of the early Beatles: black ties, coats, trousers, heeled boots, and long, shaggy hair. The music included "I Wanna Hold Your Hand," "Eight Days a Week," "All my Loving," and "Yesterday," which instilled unity among the community.

After a brief break, Penny Lane returned in costumes the Beatles wore on the album cover of Sergeant Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band. The multi-colored full-length gown style, with epaulets and braids, lit up the stage as they sang such hits as "Lucy in the Sky with Diamonds," "With a Little Help from my Friends," and "A Day in the Life," among others.

During the final segment, the group appeared in long formal tuxedos. This reflected the period which began with the movie "Magical Mystery Tour." Their performance included "Back in the USSR," "Long and Winding Road," "Let it Be," and the finale from "Abbey Road."

"The words remind me of a time when people had idealistic goals and were trying to make the world a better place," confided junior Andy Vanyo. This type of emotion and feeling of nostalgia was shared by most of the Mitty Community. Penny Lane proved music of decades past can still unite a group of people as it did years ago. The ideals of the Beatles will continue to be communicated through their songs and through performances like those of Penny Lane.

Getting to class during Spirit Week '83 was an adventure in itself. In one day, a typical student experienced the deep, dark underworld of the senior's "1984 Leagues Under the Sea," life in the fast lane with the junior's "Electric Avenue," journeyed through the sophomore's "Jungle," and enjoyed the festive spirit in the freshmen's "Halloween" hallway. Students, as well as hallways, were adorned in crazy and imaginative costumes throughout the week. Monday, Administration Day, was new this year. er by waddling around school overly regnant. Tourist, 50's Theme and Backwards Day brightened up the rest of the week.

Spirit Week is not held to haze freshmen, but to focus on pride in the school and stress the values it stands behind.

"The goal this year was to generate spirit and pride in the school," said Michael Fallon, Student Activities Director. "Last year, or in years past the focus has always been 'BEAT BELLARMINE,' but this year we wanted to recognize all the sport teams and the entire student body, the spirit we have and the pride we've developed." Fallon also stressed an intent on a more Christian attitude during Spirit Week which differs from years past when aggressiveness was the main thrust. Such a change was sought as Spirit Week kicked off with a student body mass.

"This year, we wanted to have full participation from all sports teams and student body so that our mass would be more memorable than others in the past," commented Fallon.

The Week's activities included the Second Annual Nite Rally. Featuring a mass meditation session, reactions to the evening's event were mixed.

Her brother Scott Johnson disagreed.

"The meditation was not successful because too many people were fooling around. Yet I believe we were really spirited this year."

The week wrapped up with a two-hour concert featuring "Penny Lane," a four-man imitation of the fab foursome. This followed the Bellarmine game, postponed because of rain. The Bells soundly defeated Mitty 30-0.

"I really enjoy Spirit Week," shares Marcia Hunt. "It gives everyone a chance to show their spirit and participate in rowdy activities. The hallways and costumes were neat. I'm looking forward to next year's Spirit Week. Now I know what to do."

Marianists

The Society of Mary Celebrates its One Hundredth Anniversary

The Society of Mary was founded in order to imitate the love and devotion of Jesus to His mother. "Because of the Marianists with whom I live and work, I have learned new attitudes especially toward education, peace, and justice," explains Director of Admissions Brother Tom Spring.

Most students know Mitty is run by the Marianists, but what does that mean? Where did the Society of Mary come from? These questions are important as the sect celebrates its hundredth anniversary in California.

Founded in France by William Joseph Chaminade in 1817, the Society of Mary began its community involvement with schools immediately. However, the brothers and other members are more than just teachers. Brother Joe Hartzler sees the Marianists as, "a group of men and women who attempt to live out their baptismal commitment in a community life of which prayer and service to the people of God are characteristic traits." Within years, the first foundation in the United States formed in Ohio, the Diocese of Cincinnati. The Marianists branched out, spreading the Catholic faith through running schools. "The Marianists would rather err on the side of lenience than on severity," remarks Brother Jerome Gorg, having realized the unique atmosphere that encourages education.

Traveling from Ohio to the Hawaiian Islands, the brothers often had to stop in San Francisco two weeks or more in order to transfer from train to steamboat. The Cincinnati Diocese asked for some place in California where they could set up hotels as a stop-over point. The Bishop of San Francisco consented and offered a station in Stockton. It was readily accepted, not known to be miles from the ocean!

In 1948, the Marianist foundation grew to become the province on the Pacific, first based in Honolulu. In 1956, the headquarters were moved to Santa Cruz, then changed to Cupertino.

Between 1886 and 1898, the Marianists of California were engaged as teachers in only two schools, St. Joseph's in San Francisco and St. Mary's in Stockton.

After a few other schools were founded, Father Walter Tredtin began negotiations for an Archbishop Mitty High School in San Jose. Father Leonard M. Fee later continued the discussions, and on September 1, 1964, twenty boys met in a classroom at Queen of Apostles for their first days in high school. The freshman class spent most of their first year on an elementary school's campus, but it was a joyous day when their classes were moved into the newly constructed buildings of Mitty High.

Those who have joined the Brothers of Mary have found a lifelong job, helping to give the Marianist schools a firm backbone for education. During Mitty's first years, the staff included five Marianist brothers and three lay teachers. As the student body grew, new classes were added. More teachers were needed to run the school, and lay teachers were hired. Mitty began to provide education for students in the area, was budding into a strong, community-oriented high school.

Brother Allen DeLong was Mitty's principal for its first ten years. Before leaving to become a priest, he made many important changes necessary to the school's development. In 1971, he supported the merger between Mother Butler and St. Lawrence, both girls' schools, and Mitty. This increased the student body to over 1000 students. Through this period of turmoil, open campus, no dress code, and no bells all resulted as needs of the time. Though several years have passed since the initial changes, the members of the Society of Mary support the improvements.

The Mitty community of faith can continue the work of the gospel with the help of the Marianists. "We offer insight to help lay teachers carry on education," says Father Rodney DeMartini. The Brothers of Mary are looking forward to a better future for Catholic education.

Homecoming: How it Was

Confessions of an almost Queen

Ever have the feeling somebody is playing an awful trick on you? The picture that comes to mind is the scene from the movie "Carrie" where she thinks she's accepted by the high school crowd and is to be crowned Prom Queen but ends up with a bucket of pig's blood unceremoniously dumped on her. Well, this picture, along with panic, arose when someone told me I had been nominated for Homecoming Queen.

As tears formed in my eyes (everyone thought, "How cute. She really is Homecoming material."), they were there because of the doom I felt crawling quietly toward me. Is this a joke? Why me? Can I go through with this?

Having ceased to wonder who in the neck nominated me, I pushed head-on into the topsy-turvy routine of Homecoming preparations and election.

The only time I felt I had some control over the outcome, a chance to show the real me, was the staff interview. This was one thing Student Government added to somehow alleviate the idea this might be a popularity contest. The staff had to decide who would make the top five.

Throughout the meeting, my opinions were sought as I conversed freely with Rob Komar, Steve Davis, Josie Mazar, Lani Miller and Nancy Dorsey. As the discussion ended, I interviewed THEM, hoping to find answers to many questions I had about Homecoming, such as the meaning of it all, why is there a Queen, is there a God? If so, why didn't He make just one more appearance and get me out of this? Many of these questions had been asked of me, yet the staff wasn't sure of the answers themselves. So much for the Cosmic certainty.

"THE ENVELOPE PLEASE." To my thrill and surprise, I made it to the top five nominees which meant I'd be in the Queen's court. Alleluia! But here's where I wanted to get off the bandwagon, 'cause I'd reached my destination.

The whole Homecoming evening, including the ceremony, was amusing. Looking as if we were ready more for a debutante ball than a half-time ceremony, we tried to cheer for our team as best we could without moving a hair or getting dirt on our outfits. Despite the cold benches and chilly weather, we got into the spirit of the game. Of course, there were those suffering from a feeling akin to what a lobster feels within two feet of a radar range, but the majority of us took it as it was meant to be taken, an experience simply to enjoy.

Knowing that Michelle Sanchez was going to win (Michelle was about the only one who didn't), I concentrated on the ancient art of walking into the field like a normal human being without tripping and dragging my escort down. Unbeknownst to the sports fans, the mood on the field was not of a solemn, ceremonial manner. Behind the smile plastered on my face, I was dying over the comments said throughout the ceremony by various nominees. I think the humor helped us all get through it.

Was it worth going through all that hassle and preparation to put on a half-time show? I'm glad I was able to participate in such a glamorous event because it enabled me to see different aspects of the Mitty community. But I can honestly say that I would not go through it again.

Organizations benefit from large, large turnouts

Money, money, money. That's what dances brought in as they all passed the breaking-even point and made large profits.

It started with the musical variety of Kelly & Kline from KWSS on September 23 with the Back-to-School Dance. Student Government made $800 profit and felt this was the best dance of the year. "It was a great dance. It was fun to be back, especially since it was my first dance as a senior," commented Tiffany Owens.

Then came the Homecoming Dance which, although not as suc-

Successful as the year's opener, still made $400 for ASB. Though not attended by many, those who went felt the photography and music were good.

On October 28, costumed ghosts and goblins made an appearance at the second annual Masquerade Ball, sponsored by the Mitty Theatrical Arts. Although it grossed a great deal, only $100 were left after the payment of expenses for D.J. Alfred Glaciano, decorations, and Sweet Charity." Catherine Sanders felt it was successful, and there were no problems. "There were a lot of people and there were some really elaborate costumes," stated Sanders.

Next came the day girls had waited for, November 18 and the Sadie Hawkins Dance which netted $800 for the senior class. Sound Investment provided the music and the seniors once again made money. "It was organized well," said junior Jessica Hipolito, speaking about the country western settings of hay and saddles.

The junior and freshmen classes then put on a festive occasion with the Christmas Dance, netting $1800. Next to the Back-to-School, many felt this to be "one of the best ones" as stated senior Mike Sanchez. Santa made an appearance, adding further to the Christmas spirit that students already showed.

The Valentine's Dance, with D.J. Steve Wozniak, grossed $2000, bringing in money for the junior class. Despite profits, alcohol problems caused faculty and others to review dances and encouraged tighter security.

The dances showed the spirit and enthusiasm of the school. These feelings continued through the year: the KQAK Dance with D.J. Rob Francis attracted many, as did the Father-Daughter Dance, the Junior Prom held at the Red Lyon in San Jose, and the Senior Ball in San Francisco.

The winter of our discontent

The snow caused more excitement than the United States did the first week of the Winter Olympics at Sarajevo, Yugoslavia.

Hungry from their 1980 performance, including an upset victory over the Russians in hockey, the U.S. troops were primed, but were they ready?

The hockey team began with an opening loss to Canada and continued downhill from there. And figure skating contender Rosalynn Sumners took second, disappointed she did not win gold.

Things didn't improve dramatically, but the U.S. did suddenly spurt into the limelight when Bill Johnson and Phil Mahre, followed at second by brother Steve, took unprecedented firsts in downhill and slalom skiing. Scott Hamilton won gold in men's singles figure skating, and Kitty and Peter Carruthers placed second in pair skating, the best American finish since 1952.

The events were also graced with another, and highly unusual, first: British dancers Jayne Torvill and Christopher Dean rated 6's across the board.

The courts and big business

First the good news: the supreme court decided against taxing video recorders, the space program conducted its first untethered EVA, and Martin Luther King's birthday was made a federal holiday.

Now the bad news: since AT&T broke up, it may cost you more money to talk to your friends about the good news.

NASA's Challenger launch was first marred by the inoperation of two multi-million dollar satellites which failed to respond to signals shortly after their launch from the craft. But the mission included a number of unique experiments, including the first unmanned walk through use of an armchair-appearing device known as a manned maneuvering unit.

On January 1, local Californians said goodbye to AT&T and hello to Pacific Bell as the parent company moved from local to strictly long-distance service. Phone users hoped for only a mild crunch as higher rates were expected.

In the courts, newscaster Christine Kraft won, then had overturned, her suit against a local station she said fired her because she was too old. Former California NOW head Ginny Foat was acquitted of murder in her trial in Louisiana. And, in a precedent-setting decision, the Supreme Court reversed an appellate court's decision not to grant the estate of Karen Silkwood a monetary suit against the Kerr-McGee nuclear plant.

The political arena

The stock market said it all: it was the best of times, it was the worst of times.

Reflecting the tenor of the country, the Dow Jones Industrial Average set record highs last year, but it also plummeted dramatically as the market reacted to national events.

Inflation and unemployment both worked their ways down, but interest rates continued to maintain a stubbornly high level as President Ronald Reagan proposed a budget resulting in record deficits with an emphasis on defense spending.

Meanwhile, Reagan continued to lose members of his staff, the most infamous being former Secretary of the Interior James Watt. Watt's resignation followed his response to a question concerning his own staff. The Secretary noted that he had one of everything: a black, a Jew, a woman, and a cripple. Public reaction led to Watt's departure and the installation of the National Security Adviser William Clark.

November elections set a few precedents. Martha Layne Collins became the nation's first woman governor, installed in Kentucky. Several blacks won mayoral elections including Philadelphia's W. Wilson Goode and Harvey Gantt in Charlotte, North Carolina.

And in local news...

Barely five years after his conviction for the murder of San Francisco Mayor George Moscone and Supervisor Harvey Milk, Dan White was paroled and released in Los Angeles without the knowledge or consent of that city's fathers.

San Francisco station KRON-TV broke a nationwide story concerning the harmful effects of pesticide EDB, and Betty Crocker, Duncan Hines and others saw their products pulled from market shelves.

And Marriott's, fighting a gloomy financial future, declared itself available to the highest bidder. The city of Santa Clara voted narrowly to make the purchase.

The Year In Review

Love and divorce

There is no rest for the social. While world events wound exorably to their limaxes, the rich, the famous and the beautiful moved to different drummers.

Humming the Wedding March, singers Elton John and Paul Simon tied their respective knots. English-born John married German-bred Renata Blauel while one-half of Simon & Garfunkel married Star Wars' Princess Leia, Carrie Fisher.

Further along in her marriage, Princess Diana announced a second royal import, and Britons offered odds of 10 to 11 on a girl and even odds on a boy. And even further along in his marriage, Johnny Carson found himself the recipient of divorce papers from wife Joanna. Though he claimed she needed $250,000 a month to maintain her lifestyle, she settled for a sum considerably, though undisclosed, less.

Supermen and powers

That Time picked President Ronald Reagan and Soviet Premier Yuri Andropov as its men of the year indicated the part the superpowers played this year.

The downing of Korean Air Lines Flight 007 in September chilled an already frozen relationship. 269 passengers were lost in the plane Soviets claimed violated their air space.

Konstantin Chernenko succeeded Andropov following the latter's death in February.

Meanwhile, the Soviet efforts in Poland proved nettlesome again when former Solidarity leader Lech Walesa was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize.

Marines police the globe

Theodore Roosevelt's big stick was replaced by President Reagan's Rangers and Marines as the United States involved itself deeper in world affairs.

Supplanting an international peace force, U.S. Marines moved into Lebanon last year but failed to attract widespread public response until more than 230 soldiers were killed at headquarters when a dynamite-laden truck rammed the main gate. More than 80 others were wounded in the blast.

The September incident was followed by the invasion of Grenada in November. Marines and Rangers flooded the Caribbean island on an early Tuesday morning and removed American students matriculating at an island medical school.

Reporters were excluded from first-hand coverage. Finally, the failings of the Gemayel government in Lebanon in February resulted in the withdrawal of Marines, a task accomplished by the end of the month. As Marines withdrew, battle ship U.S.S. New Jersey continued to shell the countryside that surrounds Beirut.

Farewell to auld acquaintances

Like chimney sweepers come to dust*

-William Shakespeare-

The year was not without its losses. A few, famous and otherwise, left legacies.

Entertainment said goodbye to a few mainstays and rock music lost a beach boy. Broadway belter Ethel Merman achieved fame through her vocal deliveries of such standards as You're The Top, There's No Business Like Show Business, and Everything's Coming Up Roses. One-time pink panther David Niven passed away late last year. And in December, Beach Boys drummer Dennis Wilson, long plagued by alcoholism, drowned in a swimming incident in southern California.

The newcasting industry lost three on-air personalities. A veteran of tv's early years, John Cameron Swasey died in mid-1983. ABC News anchor Frank Reynolds died of cancer last fall. And up-and-coming newcaster Jessica Savitch died suddenly in a car accident.

Golden arches entrepreneur Ray Kroc died in January. Kroc's expansion of a southern California hamburger stand run by two brothers named McDonald revolutionized the fast-food industry in the 60's.

From Fien to Community

Parents, students and staff gather for fun

Inclement weather didn't dampen the spirit of Mitty Community Day, although it did discourage attendance.

The day of events consisting of track, tennis, golf, and soccer competitions was formerly known as the Brother Fier Day. This year, however, as an attempt to attract a greater interest in the event the day was renamed Mitty Community Day.

"From what I have heard it has kind of been dying," suggested Michael Fallon, "each year it loses a little more prestige and interest. They tried to ressurect it this year by calling it Mitty Community Day." The change in name was in no way an attempt to lessen the accomshments of Brother Fien, a man committed to Mitty Athletics. Regardless of the name given to the series of events, most agreed the Mitty Community Day was valuable in building a sense of both spirit and community.

"This day is becoming an excellent addition, and I think we need a lot more of them to get the whole Mitty community together, which is rare," remarked Phil Sumner, as he waited in the cold for his turn in the tennis round robin. This view was widely supported by parents in attendance.

While most believed the Parents Club, the primary organizers of the events, did a satisfactory job of publicity, others pointed to students as the ones responsible for getting their peers and parents to attend such activities.

"Kids don't really feel comfortable having their parents around at school," suggested Emily Tenerelli, Mitty parent. "It (publicity) has to be a joint effort."

Students did not seem concerned with the publicity or the dismal weather conditions. Most were out to just have fun. "If I get to play (tennis), it has been a success," explained Jim Cieciorka, senior.

The day's strenuous activities culminated with a western theme dinner and dance. This, along with a raffle, the only part of the day designed as a fundraiser, sold one-hundred and sixty-five tickets and raised a gross of $7433.

During the evening event, June Haniger became the sixth recipient of the brother Herman Fien Award for her service to the Mitty community.

Along with award presentations, raffle winners were announced. Rudy and Loretta Venegas captured the top prize of $2,000 while Mark P. Mark won the second award of $1,000. Frank Machado collected the $500 third prize.

In addition to the major prize winners, students and the homeroom moderators whose homerooms raised the most money were awarded prizes. Ron Nicoletti and Kristina Specht captured the top spot in their respective divisions.

"Despite the weather, the day was a success," reflected George Reilly, Development Director, "because the parents, alumni, faculty, and staff of Mitty came together, and that was its purpose."

Students tarred and feathered by teachers

On a cold November day, a crowd of forty or more spectators gathered to see the faculty overwhelm the students, 31-2, in the third annual Turkey Bowl.

Although the students started with a great promise, scoring 2 points on an interception and safety, it would prove to be the last time they would score.

In the last minutes of the first quarter, Mark Costanza intercepted and scored, placing the faculty on top 7-2. The faculty continued this scoring streak into the second quarter when Dan Stapp caught a pass to push the faculty close to the student's 15-yard line. This play led to a faculty touchdown, giving them a 16-point lead at half-time.

During half-time, the girl's JV and varsity cheerleaders, along with moderator Debbie Rocha, entertained the spectators with a game of "powderpuff football." This game within a game ended in a 7-7 tie.

In the third quarter, the students attempted to make a comeback, but the faculty defense remained strong. The faculty offense also remained in control, scoring a third touchdown, which widened the point difference even further.

Student defense held the faculty after their third quarter score until the last three minutes of the fourth quarter when McCrone threw a pass to Petrinovich who ran a touchdown, making the final score 31-2.

For the first time, the faculty beat the students, thus becoming the 1983 Turkey Bowl Champions.

"Approximately 700 people turned out for this open dance, which was more than usual," stated Bill Hutton, Junior Class Moderator. The Christmas dance, sponsored by the junior class, was held Friday, December 17.

Taking pictures with Santa Clause, played by Bill Barone, was a popular event during the evening. Nearly 180 pictures were taken of students sitting on St. Nick's lap. The rest of the night was spent dancing to music provided by a disc jockey from KSCU.

"The dance was really great and sitting on Santa's lap was fun. There was a great festive spirit," commented Junior Dave Truhe.

In keeping with the spirit of the season, the concert band provided traditional Christmas songs on the night of December 20. The evening began as the choir entered the cafeteria, singing Christmas carols. Three hundred people listened for two hours before joining in the sing-a-long.

"The concert was successful, and we were well received," commented conductor Frank Oddo. For the first time, players appeared in uniform. Black tuxedo jackets were provided by the combined efforts of students and department members who raised funds. Band members provided their own white shirts, black pants and black shoes.

After the festivities, the crowd moved to their cars for the drive home:

And I heard them exclaim
'Ere they drove out of sight
Merry Christmas to all
And to all a good night.

Rallies Broaden Minds

Self-defense to concerts found at activities

Activity mods stopped being party mods when Student Government and the Spirit squads began planning activities or rallies for each activity period. Rallies attracted students wanting to show their pride through divisional and crowd cheers. The activities introduced sport teams and coaches. The 2nd annual nite rally was held September 29. Students and faculty came out to give support to the football teams before they faced the Bellarmine Bells.

"The Penny Lane concert was one of the best rallies because everybody came and had a really great time," commented Peggy Mik-los. Although the crowd was urged to stay in the stands, students rushed to the stage and bunny-hopped enthusiastically. Because of their late arrival, many students were not able to enjoy the sounds of Puget Sound, who played in the gym in January. Arriving at the end of the period, many students had to leave after the second number to make it to their next class.

Self defense is something more and more people are learning. Model Mugging, Self Defense for Women, is a program designed to inform women how to defend themselves against attackers. A representative came to Mitty during the fall semester to demonstrate self defense techniques. Student body representatives were asked to help in the demonstration.

Not all rallies were for spirit or sports. The State of the Union rally, January 6, informed students how each class was doing. Presidents from each class gave financial reports and discussed upcoming events such as bakesales, proms, concerts, and dances.

After a two-year disappearance, the dating game returned in February but to much the same response that prompted its dismissal. The nature of the questions prompted staff response that resulted in a letter of apology from student activities. The following day's activity proved more eventful. Everyone seemed to like the idea of slaughtering each other with volleyballs on February 16. In the first round, seniors squeaked past the sophomores and juniors smeared freshmen. In the finals, seniors showed experience and outplayed the juniors to win the final.

Liturgies also took part in activity periods. The opening liturgy, September 9, brought a sense of unity back to the students. The Christmas liturgy, held December 21, put the true meaning of Christmas into many students and faculty members' mind.

Activity mods, no longer party mods, were enjoyed by the entire Mitty community. A sense of community spirit was brought out at each activity.

Who's Tom Cruise? Remember the militant kid in "Taps"? That's him. But for most females, he's the Princeton-aimed student in "Risky Business" or the football player in "All The Right Moves." And, say the critics, the guy can act.

The Phenomenon. "Thriller" debuted nicely enough over a year ago, but it took the videos of "Billie Jean" and "Beat It" to reach a wider audience. And then it got scary. "Thriller" was made into a movie short that MTV, for its first time, paid exclusive Orights to show. The album became the highest-selling record in music history, entering The Guinness Book of World Records. Jackson won seven American Music Awards and eight Grammys. Even the Pepsi commercial that burned the singer's hair in January debuted to loud acclaim. And he's only 25.

What would you pay for this dolefull doll that looks like a potato with a thyroid condition? $200? Some did, and some broke bones or received them. The Cabbage Patch Doll came from nowhere and swept America at Christmas. Why? The adoption papers? Original names? Who knows? Freshman Cathy Codinack owns this fella held by freshman Karen Borges.

Give Stephen King credit. His movies never do as well as his books, but that doesn't stop him. No sirree, Bob. This last year saw the turning of several King bestsellers into movies, including "Cujo," "Firestarter," "Deadzone," "Christine," and "Children of the Corn." Hollywood must believe somebody's watching; they're planning more before the year's out.

Fads and

Fashions

How to describe a year that contains Boy George and Fritz Mondale? The fashion-tuned don't try; the essence of fashion requires a certain distance from reality. That could explain both the fun and the freakiness of '83-'84.

As new wave trends continue to exert their influence, movies, tv and music move culture from the top of society into the middle and lower. "Flashdance," a movie that critics drubbed, sparked the public so strongly, it set trends in fashion and exercising; it was no accident that Jane Fonda had a best-selling exercise book and video. "Flashdance" set a third innovation by being released in video format while the film still played the theaters. Result: a top-selling video. And torn shirts that drooped over one shoulder moved onto campus.

Other movies either made new heroes or pushed standards. Tom Cruise, Sean Penn and Jennifer Beals became sex symbols overnight. High melodrama found an audience through "Yentl," "Terms of Endearment," and "The Big Chill." Though teenage sex movies continued to proliferate, "Risky Business" surprised all by boasting an interesting script as well as a strong performance by Cruise; and more than one female is destined to remember his lip-synching of Bob Seger's "Old Time Rock 'n Roll."

Television was less innovated series-wise but produced some new products in tv movies. "Cheers" grabbed the emmy for Best Comedy its first year out, and "Hill Street Blues" continued its onslaught and even managed turning the November death of Michael Conrad into a poignant series of episodes as the sergeant's death was worked gracefully into the script. But the biggest sensation came from a show that generated nearly as much heat as its content. "The Day After" received mountains of publicity, adverse and otherwise, weeks before its showing in November. ABC News followed the performance with a roundtable headed by Ted Koppel and including Carl Sagan, Henry Kissinger and Dean Rusk among others. The film debuted in European theaters the next month to strong popular support as the U.S. and U.S.S.R played over deployed missiles. But when the words subsided, many suggested the film was more powerful in thought than execution, feeling the melodrama outran the realism.

Likewise, television treated the subjects of incest and rape in "Something About Amelia" and "When She Says No." The discussion of father-daughter incest resulted in a number of public responses that prompted local and federal aid for victimized children.

Experimentally, music showed the strongest innovations. The trimmed-down sound of U-2 inspired new groups like Big Country and R.E.M. who were named best new group by Rolling Stone. New wave saw the continuation of new groups like Berlin, Eurythmics, Thomas Dolby, Thompson Twins and Culture Club. Eurythmics and Culture Club notched top-selling albums and Boy George's group received a grammy for best new group.

Heavy metal left its mark as bludgeoning bands proliferated. Quiet Riot came from nowhere and ranked a strong nationwide hit in "Cum on and Feel the Noize." Van Halen even won critical approval with their "1984," and Def Leppard added enough melody to their sound to increase sales significantly.

Meanwhile, mainstays of various ages came back stronger than ever. Sting lead The Police to their largest selling record yet in "Synchronicity" while David Bowie rivaled The Police's tour in size with the new sounds of his "Modern Love." Billy Joel reached back to the 50's for his "Innocent Man," while the Rolling Stones mixed new and old in "Undercover of the Night." Oldsters Paul McCartney and Bob Dylan gave new releases as did Paul Simon, who scrubbed on-again-off-again partner Art Garfunkel's harmonies from his new album "Allergies" and stayed successfully solo.

And then there was Michael Jackson. But that's another story altogether...

It's In To Be Outdoor S

Nature and health make roughing it popular

Whether they are climbing the rocks, riding the rapids or skiing the ridge, students have a wide variety of opportunities to become involved in the out-of-doors.

"I think the new interest in these activities is caused by the increase in interest in both Nature and keeping fit," commented sophomore Amy Choice.

The first outdoors activity was skiing. First established to provide student trips to the slopes during Winter Break, it expanded to provide three to four skiing opportunities each year.

Organized by science teacher Dave Kassler, the ski trips are now the most popular outdoors event. An average of 57 students participate in these weekend rendezvous at the bridges.

A branch-off of this interest in nordic skiing is the Shared Adventures program run by Gary Cramton. In its fifth season, this program involves twenty students, half as guides, the other half local disabled youths. Each weekend, these individuals travel to the Tahoe Nordic Ski.

"Shared Adventures is really great. Not only do you get the chance to ski, you also get the chance to meet new people," stated junior Misty Hunter.

Cramton also teaches wilderness education and rock climbing. Both classes take field trips which allow students to test new techniques.

Each Wilderness Education class

takes a trip to the La Honda ropes course where they spend the day climbing trees and traversing tight wires 90 feet in the air.

"After you do the ropes, you're really exhausted, but you feel as though you've really accomplished something," commented junior Raul Vera.

The rock climbing class takes similar excursions. Weather permitting, the class takes at least one trip a year, usually to the cliffs of the Pinnacles.

The rock climbing class created so much enthusiasm that students began to take weekend trips, separate from class, under the direction of Cramton and science teacher Phil Miller.

"Climbers climb because the rocks are there to be conquered," stated senior Oscar Vera. "It helps you to realize your limitations."

Outdoor activities also extend beyond the school year. In the summer, Kassler takes students on a white water rafting day trip. Last summer he and twenty students braved 21 miles of the wild, white water on the Carson River.

Added to these organized activities are several informal groups. Students join to wind surf, sail, and hike at locations throughout California.

"It is great how at this school there is such a wide variety of things, that one weekend you could be skiing and the next windsurfing," concluded freshman Cindy Novak.

Seaquence in nightclub scene finishes season

Singles may meet singles. People dine and dance the night away. Sounds like a nightclub? Crowds cheer for the performance to the rock band Seaquence. Must be a concert . . . Combine the two and squeeze them in a school cafeteria — Mitty's.

The Nightclub/Concert drew a crowd of about 100 people. It was open to all students, but especially designed to attract those who had attended the basketball game against Serra that night, Feb. 11. Director of Student Activities

Michael Fallon also issued an invitation to Serra students to join in the food and the fun which began after the game and ended at midnight. Tickets were a dollar at the door, but fifty-cent discounts were given at the game.

The cafeteria was strategically divided into three areas, providing different activities and pastimes simultaneously. Sequence played on stage, as people danced below. Their progressive rock included original songs, and ones by Genesis, Asia, Pink Floyd, and others. A fifteen-foot clearance was made in front of the stage to provide a compact but efficient dance floor.

Tables in the rest of the cafeteria seated people grabbing a bite to eat or resting on danced-out feet. Student Government members brought refreshments, the Booster Club sold food while students cleaned up.

This was not the first time such an activity was held. Called the Coffee House last year, it was not as successful, perhaps because of lack of entertainment. Fallon had originally caught on to the idea of a Coffee House at a workshop the year before.

That night was actually the second time Sequence set foot on Mitty soil. Sequence had originally been scheduled to play before Penny Lane last October 1st. But the football game had been rained out the day before, and both events were packed into one hectic Saturday, leaving no room for Sequence's performance. Thus, they made their reappearance for the Nightclub/Concert.

Improvements aimed for next year are better advertisement and more variety in refreshments.

Everything went as planned. "The small crowd thoroughly enjoyed themselves," said Fallon.

Hackers away!

This generation belongs to the hackers. Mitty obtained ten Hewlett-Packard computers to accommodate students needs.

Proposals for the grant were presented two years ago and updated several times. Persons involved included parents Joe Brescia, Bob Mitchell, Gail James, Director of Development George Reilly, and computer and science teacher Judy James.

The ten HP's will be useful in computer-aided instruction, especially in remedial programs, and the staff will be encouraged to use them. Students can use these and other computers in the resource room through a user-access card.

Last autumn, seven Apple IIe's were received. The four original NorthStars will be sold, and fifteen more Apples will be obtained. The Capital Endowment Campaign provides for a computer lab in the future.

"Our goal is computer literacy for all Mitty graduates," commented computer science teacher Larry Oliveria.

The crispy crunch of little greens

With crisp greens, crunchy carrots and spicy salad dressings, the salad bar caused new waves in the campus fast food business.

Introduced a few weeks before the end of the first semester, the salad bar was created "to provide an alternative to the junk people often eat when they are hurried," commented cafeteria head Annette Katz. The bar also offered yogurt, soup, bread and potato skins.

The salad bar required a number of materials to get started, including the bar itself, a sneeze guard, and, of course, the produce. New personnel were also hired to run the concession.

"I think the salad bar is great. I love healthy foods and I especially like salads," commented sophomore Amy Choice. "Plus, it takes as little time to get a salad as to get a candy bar."

At a price of $1.50, the salad bar set a precedent by providing quick yet healthy food.

The pitter patter of little pupils

Watch for more toddler-toting teachers around school. Karen DeMonner, Ron Nicoletti's wife Val, Rick Petrich's wife Marilyn, and Dave Brown's wife Adriane all gave birth this year. And Mimi and Joe Bauer are expecting.

Megan Petrich's birth September 20 at 7.8 pounds was wonderful news for her beaming parents. However, nature likes to procrastinate. Taryn Noelle Nicoletti made her grand entrance a week late on February 2, weighing eight pounds, thirteen ounces; dad wisely prepared himself and his other daughter Tracy for sibling rivalry. Nicholas DeMonner arrived three weeks late on February 9, a healthy seven pounds, six ounces. The Browns received Jennifer sooner than expected in March, but daughter is doing well. Bauer's students have been suggesting suggesting names for her child, due July 16, while father Joe has been reading books and redecorating.

How'd they get pregnant in the first place? Bauer has her suspicions: "It's from drinking out of the same glass as Debbie Rocha."

College to most seniors becomes the focus of their hopes and fears as they near graduation. Will they be accepted to the colleges they applied for? Will they be able to find housing or enter the field of their choice? Or, will they be discouraged by financial problems? the message

"We just wanted to brighten up homeroom," explained Herrera, "and give the students something to look forward to."

With this idea in mind, ETV News was set in motion. Brandy Parris, Dave Truhe, Tina Johnson and Carolyn Brilla each became an anchor person, taking turns depending on the assignment.

ETV immediately distinguished itself through its use of on-location filming, interviews and feature stories. The second edition contained a look at the new salad bar, replete with filmed footage and interviews of cafeteria patrons. The behind-the-desk readings were also supplemented with out-in-the-field interviews and the use of computer graphics. Playing every Friday, the ETV segments supplanted the reading of announcements in homeroom.

Creativity and necessity sparked this master plan; participation and enjoyment will carry it into its broadcasting future.

Tea for two

When Mitty went coed in 1972, certain changes were inevitable. In addition to girls' bathrooms, and girls' locker rooms, there came the Mother-Daughter Tea.

Nearly 200 mothers and daughters attended the social this March sponsored by the Parents Club and attended by such members as Barbara McTighe, moderator Father Don Bracht, and president Gloria Rehbock.

The social was organized by Rehbock and twenty other mothers. Name tags were made, and flowers were presented to the mothers. Cakes, sandwiches, coffee and tea were provided. Lost most afternoon teas, suggested dress was semi-formal.

The goal of the Mother-Daughter Tea was to provide an opportunity for mothers and their daughters to socialize and meet new faces.

"We make it more formal than most gatherings, so that the young women have a chance to learn how to function in a get-together that's different from a popcorn-soda party," commented McTighe.

Many mothers took off work or came during their lunch hour to attend the social with their daughters.

"When these ladies are off in college," stated McTighe, "they will hopefully be able to balance a teacup and mingle with those they don't know."*

After fifteen years, Gallucci Graduates

Starting as a freshman and working her way up to a senior basically describes the life of Joanne Gallucci during her 15 years at Mitty.

Gallucci left the school in January to pursue other interests. In 1969, she began work in the cafeteria. At that time, Mitty was an all-boys' school with about 650 students, she recalled. Gallucci was hired by then Dean of Students Steve Davis.

"I then worked in the main office doing general work," until "I began to work in the Business Office," said Gallucci. She stayed in the Business Office for the rest of her stay, eventually becoming Business Manager before assuming the position of Assistant Business Manager last September.

Gallucci decided at the beginning of the year she needed a change. "I will miss the school and the students very much. This school has been a part of my life for 15 years," she noted, "and it's something you don't just walk away from."

The most memorable events for Gallucci included receiving the Brother Fien Award and a luncheon held at her departure in January. "I will miss the whole school," she said. She treasures her collection of pictures of Mitty teams and people.

However, like most graduates, Gallucci will have many memories to take with her. And, she states, "I don't intend to stay away from the Mitty community and my friends."

Freshmen unite through B-ball nite

The spirit of '87 ran through the AMHS Sports Pavillion September 15 as basketball players and spectators gathered for the First Annual Freshmen Boys and Girls Basketball Nite.

The evening was an attempt by Coach Rick Petrich and Student Activities Director Michael Fallon to unite the freshman class early in the school year and develop their own class spirit.

The two-hour event began with an introduction of participating homerooms and was followed by performances by the Junior Varsity Cheerleaders and Flag Girls. The Boys Varsity Basketball team, under Petrich's supervision, helped in organizing, coaching and refereeing the event.

The Best Boys' Homeroom went to the Pacers (Petrich's homeroom), and Hannan's Hawks won for the Best Girls Homeroom. Billie Spence's Jammers won in the Most Spirited category.

With the school's attempt to unite freshmen and instill a pride amongst them, many felt the B-Ball Nite was a step in the right direction. As freshman participant Kathy Kingston noted, "The school made us feel special because they made such a big deal about it, with cheerleaders and all, that we felt a sense of pride in being the class of 1987."

Alberto nets a two-week prize

Who would have thought hitting a basket could win a $2000 scholarship to Nick Bollettieri's Tennis Camp in Florida?

Monica Alberto didn't.

"I felt so crazy. I am the last person I thought would hit it."

Alberto was one of 150 high school tennis players who attended a Nick Bollettieri Tennis Clinic held at Courtside Tennis Club in Los Gatos last fall. Bollettieri talked to the kids and gave demonstrations. One drill required hitting a wire basket at the opposite end of the court. Alberto was one of three succeeding in the task.

"I felt weird, strange; people were shocked," commented Alberto.

Her prize was two free weeks at Bollettieri's camp, a nationally-known organization that has produced several international champions. Arrangements were made so Alberto and sister Denise could go back for one week instead of two.

"May I see your ticket, please?" This particular ticket, however, was no ordinary one. Created for the Greg Kihn concert, it was specially designed by Mitty Publications.

Mitty Publications was established this year, based on a suggestion by Dave Setnick, publishing representative to the Excalibur. Yearbook advisor Jeff House realized the benefits of cutting costs on the yearbook and, after conferencing with Lion's Roar advisor Linda Ferrante, a proposal was submitted to the administration in April of 1983.

The incentive for in-house typesetting included reduced costs and more creative control: "The charges amounted to $750 last year on revisions, and no one would know what the final product would look like until the publication came out," noted House.

In the spring of last year, Ferrante and House visited Saratoga High School and were impressed with the journalism department's use of computers and typesetter. After Father Rodney De Martini also visited Saratoga, it was agreed that the proposal would include a computer and typesetter.

"The $17,000 investment included a room, structural changes, and new equipment," commented House. The typesetter, a Compugraphic IV-B, and a Franklin Ace 1000 computer with 64K, word processor, CPM, monitor and two disk drives were set up in a one-time janitor's room around the corner from the faculty lounge.

The freedom of publishing

After a five-hour instruction, House learned enough about the typesetter and computer to give Mitty Publications its start. In November, MP released its first product, an NCETA flyer for Father De Martini. As work picked up, the small business provided a number of in-house products including a basketball program for Rick Petrich, work on the Development Office's Alumni News, and materials for the administration.

In the future, the newspaper will be entirely typeset on campus, and students in both publications will learn wordprocessing skills. The yearbook will expand its use of the typesetter and Mitty Publications will take on more in-house work. Students will take over production and receive business credit under directed studies.

Hey Bob,

I just got this great deal on an elevator pass! Are you going to the big game Friday? How 'bout those big seniors, uh. I'm worried about getting tied to a pole. This place sure is big. Did you hear that new song "Roxanne" by that weird group? Got to run. I'll be late for class.

See ya

February, 1982

Hi Bob,

Things are really harder this year. But I really dig Mr. Rogers, you know. Do you want to go to the Sadie's next week? It will be really fun. We can like get matching shirts and everything. I can't wait til next year. It's a real bummer not being an upperclassman. Have you heard that song "Don't Stand So Close to Me"? It's really great. For sure I'll see you fifth period for lunch.

Talk to ya later

January, 1983

Dear Bob,

How are things with you? Dad's giving me the keys to the car this weekend. It is so nice to have a license. Jim and Sue have been going out for the last five months. Our class won most-spirited during spirit week. It feels great to be an upperclassman. Congratulations on your soccer game. Next year all the colleges will be scouting you. What time are you picking me up for the Huey Lewis concert Friday? Don't forget I want that new album "Ghost in the Machine" for my birthday.

See you Friday

March, 1984

Dear Bob,

The pressure of school is really getting to me. There are so many applications to fill out. I am waiting to hear from the scholarship committee; I could really use the thousand dollars. My English teacher wrote me a letter of recommendation last week. Hope it will help. My whole life seems like one big deadline. I am constantly running around trying to make ends meet. It is nice to be the big man on campus. I am anxious to graduate but I am going to miss this place. What is going to happen to us next year? These four years have gone by so fast. As I look back, I remember all the good times we shared together. We have both changed since freshman year. I knew the first time you looked at me in algebra you had a crush on me. It took you two years to ask me out. I had a great time at the prom. There are so many things I want to tell you, but I know I will see "Every Breath You Take."

Love Always,

P.S. I got accepted!

"Seniors are the leaders of the student body," stated Assistant Athletic Director John Gilmore.

"Because of their experience through the years," mentioned Athletic Director Marty Procaccio, "they have become capable leaders." Although Gilmore did not see the senior class as having excellent individuals, the class as a whole proved to be strong in athletics. Each year the Mitty Varsity teams have scored high in the WCAL.

"The Seniors have learned success comes from hard work," noted Gilmore. Seniors learned to work hard together to gain ability and talent. The hard work shown by seniors rubbed off on the underclassmen and encouraged them to try harder to become better athletes.

As individuals, the boys showed versatility with the majority playing more than one sport. Eric Stevenson stood out with his talent in football and track. Stevenson still holds the Frosh/Soph record for the 400 meter. Danny Hale also played football and track. Hale holds the high-jump record. Outstanding basketball players were Bill Rehbock and Pete Christian. Rehbock and Christian received honorable mentions in the WCAL. In his junior year, Christian was second in the league for free-throws with an 83%. Rehbock shared his athletic talents with baseball: "It depends what season it is. During baseball season, baseball is my favorite sport. Both sports have been very good to me."

Running seemed to be the ideal sport for senior girls. Kim Kistler, talented in track and cross-country, holds the 100, 200, and 400 meter records. Kistler was also on the Mitty relay team which placed 6th in the state. Another runner, Kim Thronson, holds the 2-mile record and is just as talented in basketball.

An outstanding athlete in another field is Amy Luhn who swims. Luhn is talented in the breaststroke. She has a national record in the 200 meter individual medley. "It is hard for a school to support a sport that is not really a school sport." Amy felt that few students knew she had swum in CCS.

Records indicate the class of 1984 made few grounds-breaking strides. But class members and coaches felt they had something else to offer.

"The Seniors have contributed leadership," mentioned Bill Rehbock, "our win-loss records were not too great, but we never gave up. Our senior class as a whole has contributed a great sense of spirit."

— Kirsten Kaercher —

Kim Kistler, holding the record in the 100, 200, and 400 meter, prepares for another award-winning performance.

Seniors

Late into the night, seniors slave over figures, formulas and phonics, striving towards new challenges and college.

A new trend has emerged at Mitty involving courses seniors take. Only a few years ago, most seniors opted for easy classes and light schedules. This year's seniors, however, have chosen to take hard courses while, at the same time, maintaining a heavy class load.

One reason seniors decided to make their final year in high school a productive one is the tough requirements colleges are enforcing.

"If you take difficult classes and do well, colleges are more likely to accept you," stated Pat Fitzgerald, a senior taking calculus and Physics Honors. Although Fitzgerald also mentioned the many hours spent trying to "keep afloat," he felt, in the ong run, it was worth it.

Other students also feel heavy course loads in high school make college easier. "By taking college-level courses now and getting exposure to these subjects, college will be easier," explains Kathy Nino. Nino is presently enrolled in calculus, Physics Honors and English IV Honors. These classes not only provide access to college material, but also help towards the taking of advanced placement test which may exempt students from certain college courses.

Other seniors have a heavy schedule because they seek the challenge of extending their intellectual horizons. "By taking advanced courses, I learn of new and often exciting subjects which stimulate my curiosity," stated Dan Norbutas. Norbutas takes both calculus and Physics Honors. Although he plans to pursue a career in political science, he feels by taking mathematical and scientific courses he can be increasing his field of knowledge.

By seeking challenges and colleges, seniors have taken harder schedules and, in the end, have gained the benefit of greater knowledge.

Seniors

The time had come when seniors must decide what to do with their future. Would they work or would they go to school? It was a tough decision to make, requiring long hours of deliberation to find out what suits their needs.

The senior class was no exception. It worked out that most seniors want to go to college instead of working.

Most seniors narrowed their choices to three or four colleges. Many considered Santa Clara University as their first choice and San Jose State was second. Next year's college freshmen will be attending schools from San Francisco to San Diego with some going to Arizona, Irma Barraza and Pat Perez, and New England, Jim Kyle. The majority of the seniors plan to live away from home, as Kim Kistler said "I want to go away to college so I can be independent and make my own decisions."

CAREERS: future hopes

The popular major is business administration, chosen because it's a large field with numerous chances for advancement. Teresa Pascale stated, "In business administration I can make a lot of money to afford nice clothes and a big house." Another major with a large following is engineering. "I want to go into engineering because it is a wide field with many people and it has many opportunities. It's a growing field," states Pat Perez.

The people who would foot the bill for college are the parents since the state Universities are $5000, the UC's are $6000, and the privates range from $9000 to $13000. A few students would find a part time job to help with their own personal expenses or major oriented. But many didn't want scholarships or did not think they'd be able to get one.

The average time spent on college preparations was a year; some seniors had gone around to various college campuses and saw what each had to offer. Thus last summer Margret Piumarta went around to Cal Poly, UCSB, and other colleges, checking out their various programs.

"College is a way to a better job," explains Irma Barraza.

Seniors

Who are these students who mysteriously leave the campus during eighth period, who always achieve academic excellence, and who are never without a few dollars in their pockets? Be they gods, or be they mortals?

Better. They are the Mitty seniors working nine to five. Seniors work to earn spending money and to gain experience not obtainable through classes. Although it is believed that the only jobs available to high school students are those flipping hamburgs, seniors have proved that myth untrue.

Robert Gardner believed there was more open to a high school student than working in a food unit at Marriott's Great America where he was employed for six months prior to being offered a clerk's position at the corporate law firm of Cooley, Godward, Castro, Huddleson, and Tatum in Palo Alto. He was introduced to the firm when he helped Dan Vold, a graduate of Mitty in 1983, move a library at Cooley Godward. The administrator of the firm was so impressed with the job they did, she offered a clerk's position to either Vold or Gardner. Vold was unable to accept the position. "Less than thrilled with the situation at Marriott's," Gardner accepted the job with great enthusiasm.

JOBS: working nine to five

What began as a photocopying job for two hours after school evolved into a position that had Gardner proofreading shareholder lists and assisting with initial public offerings. In turn, the added duties had Gardner working longer hours after school and weekends to keep up with the work that needed to be done. However, Gardner says he wants to gain as much knowledge about corporate law as possible.

Being a size nine was an asset that enabled Jacqui Vitek to work for Buyer of California as a fitting model. Since she began working three years ago, the knowledge she gained resulted in her appointment as the third assistant manager of the Buyer outlet, SFO in Cupertino. She worked at SFO during the school year organizing and pricing garments. Vitek admits it was difficult at first for her to balance her school work with a job that demanded fifteen hours each week. During the summer months, she worked at the Buyer factory in San Francisco where she had to model for executives, work in the payroll department, and send cuts to contractors. "The most important thing that I learned in my years at Buyer is how to deal with business people. It is a whole different world. I learned responsibility."

Last year, Vitek was one of five people representing Buyer of California at a fashion exposition held at The Fashion Place in San Francisco. During the exposition, Vitek was expected to persuade wholesalers to purchase Buyer clothing for hundreds of retail stores throughout the country.

The knowledge she had gained working for Buyer of California she plans to take to Berkeley's School of Business next fall.

Like Vitek, Jim Kyle plans to enter the business world after college. Although working at The In-step Shoe Store was "not a high pressure job," he learned two concepts of the business world, dealing with people and selling a product. Kyle applied for a shoe salesman position when he went into the store to buy a pair of soccer shoes and saw a help-wanted sign posted in the window. Ironically, working aided rather than hindered his study habits. Kyle, like many working seniors, felt he procrastinated when given too much free time. Thus, working limited his homework time and forced him to study.

"It would be a long day" was Dave Rosendin's reason why he chose not to work during the first portion of his senior year. Instead, Rosendin worked at the family-owned Rosendin Electric this past summer in order to pay for his personal expenses. Rosendin began learning about the business at age fourteen when he stocked inventory. Last summer he analyzed blue prints in order to offer competitive bids to perspective clients. Although Rosendin is unsure if he wants to embark on a career in the family business, he realizes working for Rosendin Electric can only benefit him in his search for a place in the business world.

has been dressing up like a chocolate chip cookie and delivering dozens of Mrs. Field's cookies to unsuspecting people from Milpitas to Mountain View since March of 1983. She first saw the opening for this unique job posted on the job board next to the counseling and guidance offices. A typical working day for Brilla began at 4:30 p.m. with a phone call to Good Taste Telegrams. All the cookies, hats, horns, and certificates needed for her to perform were sent directly to her home. Brilla says she enjoyed her unusual job because she was able to make people smile.

The Mitty community may know another senior as Nancy Novak, but to children everywhere she is simply Pokey the Clown. Novak went into business for herself last summer as a birthday party clown. She always loved being a clown and began to play the role when she went to Happy Hollow petting zoo and handed out balloons to children. But when her hobby got to be too expensive to continue, she decided to forget Happy Hollow and start performing at children's parties, schools, and libraries. Through word of mouth and business cards, Novak embarked on a job that is not only profitable but a lot of fun.

"To be a clown you have to be patient and adaptable," explains Novak, who has had some difficulties planning parties. Although Novak plans to pursue a law career, she is going to continue her unique hobby.

Seniors believe in order to unlock the door to the job market, people have to be at the right place at the right time or extremely persistent. Working is a serious business seniors don't take lightly. They're ambitious individuals who know no limitations. As a result, seniors have used their jobs to help them discover career goals.

"Don't think you can't do something until you try it," recommends Jacqui Vitek.

Emergency room

From high school to hospital

"Seeing a baby being delivered in the emergency room was one of the most exciting experiences I've had," stated Peggy Miklos, a junior. Peggy has a sense of direction and community involvement which adds to her skills as a junior volunteer at Alexian Brothers Hospital in San Jose.

However, Peggy is no "ordinary junior volunteer." Her striving ambition to become a registered nurse, along with recommendations from her teachers, enables Peggy to work in the emergency ward and experience the hospital scene first-hand. "I wanted the chance to see what really happens at a hospital," she explained, "and working in the emergency room has exposed me to various advanced duties."

Peggy puts in eight to ten hours a week, helping the nurses with many of their daily tasks. These include suturing, lab runs, and x-rays. When special help is needed, Peggy is sometimes allowed to help paramedics with emergency cases. "I see some very gruesome sights, like torn legs or cracked heads when assisting the paramedics. But I find this type of special privilege to be the most rewarding work I do."

Peggy feels the individual attention she gives to the patients will benefit them and be a learning experience for her, as well. "Doing this kind of work has given me a sense of accomplishment and self satisfaction, especially when people say how nice it is for me to be volunteering my time at the hospital."

In contrast to the positive feedback Peggy receives, there are times when people don't understand why she would volunteer her time for free. "All I can say," replied Peggy, "is that my work pays off in many ways besides money, and I still have time for myself to do other things."

— Jessica Lopez —

Determined to dance

I think I can; I know I can

Defying the doctor's prognosis that she would never walk again, Betsy Townsend is now a semi-professional dancer.

Betsy had a knee injury in the sixth grade. Doctors could not diagnose her problem. She wore splints and braces but, nevertheless, kept dancing. Since then, her knees have improved through special sessions of physical therapy at "Zohar Academy of Dance." She gives all her credit to Ehud Kraus, a teacher at Zohar. "He was really terrific!" Kraus treated her with inversions along with many other exercises to help her with her back, knees, and neck.

Dancing since the age of four, her favorite type is jazz. She has performed in two shows at Bellarmine: "Grease," in which she played Frenchie, and "See How They Run," where she played the lead role of Penelope. Betsy has also danced with the semi-professional San Jose Civic Light Opera. She was a dancer in their production of "Anything Goes" and a little girl in "Showboat." Betsy was also one of the daughters in "Fiddler on the Roof."

Betsy's dream is to follow the steps of Sandy Duncan and play the part of "Peter Pan."

"What I really want to do is to someday play Peter Pan." This dream and her love of dancing are encouraging her to be strong and overcome her physical disability.

Tilley tallies her talents

'Everyone is good at something, and I wanted to find out what I was good at," says Tania Tilley. Tilley, however, found not one, but many talents. She has not only learned to play four instruments, but also draws and rides horses.

Tilley came to Mitty knowing how to play the flute, piano, and bassoon. Last summer, she taught herself to play the saxophone. Tilley was not interested in music until her parents encouraged her to start.

"They wanted me to learn how to play instruments because they never had the chance when they were young." Now, though she does get tired of practicing sometimes, she says she "could never give it up. I'd hate to think that I did all this for nothing."

Another talent of Tilley's is art. Since the fourth grade, Tilley has been interested in drawing. Her favorite subject is animals, and she is also working on painting people. Using charcoal, pastels, and oils, Tilley has won many first place ribbons for her artistic talents. She plans to major in art, hoping to someday become a commercial artist.

When Tilley has any free time left from all her activities, she enjoys horseback riding. Since the age of four, horses have been a great love of hers. She worked at Garrod Farms in Mountain View for three years, managing the rental string of horses. Before she was at the farm, she went to several camps to learn to ride. Even though she doesn't have a horse of her own, she hopes to have one someday.

Although Tilley has only had a few years of experience, she hopes to pursue her talents and hopefully develop them further.

— Niyo Kachalia —

The bassoon is only one of many instruments Tania Tilley plays (above). She also draws (left), her favorite subject being horses, the unicorn coming as a natural variation.

A leader in lion's clothing

"All the cheerleaders ran across to see the Bellarmine cheerleaders . . . I was in costume so they could not tell whether I was a guy or girl. As I was running back over to the Mitty side, I stepped in a hole and fell flat on my face. My head rolled off." This was the Monarch mascot's most embarrassing moment.

Misty Hunter is the spirited lion that brought laughter and excitement to the Monarch basketball and football games. Although she was not an official cheerleader, she had to learn all the moves for the cheers. One advantage Hunter had over other cheerleaders was she could afford to make a mistake.

The role of mascot at Mitty was resurrected when Hunter asked moderator Debbie Rocha if she could have the mascot position. "When I asked her if I could be mascot, I said, 'How do you try out for mascot?' She looked around and said, 'Does anyone want to be mascot? You made it. And it won't be that easy next year.'"

Over the summer Hunter went to spirit camp along with other Mitty cheerleaders. She attended sessions specially designed for mascots. Hunter learned not only cheerleading skills but also communication techniques. As mascot, Hunter communicates non-verbally.

She had a special feeling when little kids come up to her during the game, "They're so cute. They're not sure whether there is a person inside or whether it really is a lion inside. I love them," Hunter comments.

Hunter found the unity among the cheerleaders a positive aspect in her mascot role. The cheerleaders respected her and were willing to go along with what she did. She brought spice and variety to routines.

Chile, with sign of freedom and would like to attend Stanford University.

Aside from school, Thomas enjoys swimming and skiing. He likes to indulge in Roundtable Pizzas, and admits his passion for McDonald's Vanilla Milkshake. Thomas also enjoys going out with his friends, brother Andy, and cousin Richard Klein, both seniors.

Thomas did not find his move to a new school disturbing, but rather simple since Klein was already attending Mitty. Having Klein at school has made situations more pleasant as well as given Thomas the opportunity to meet some interesting people.

Aquamaid

Swimming away to Europe

Swimming gives some a chance to relax, but for Dawn Graybill, swimming gives her a chance to travel to Europe.

When Dawn Graybill started her training as an aquamaid, she had no idea that her team would travel to Europe. She started five years ago with the Santa Clara Aquamaids, and after long hours of practice, exercise, dance classes, and swimming laps, her team began taking trips. Since then, she has gone to Los Angeles, travelled around the United States, and finally toured Europe.

Dawn's aquamaid team travelled to Norway, Belgium, and Germany, performing in the capital cities. "We were able to take the buses and the subway to go to different places," she recalled. They were in Europe for three weeks, often going out sightseeing.

Even though Europe's beauty is overwhelming, Dawn best liked meeting the people of different countries they visited.

For Dawn, aquamaids is the experience of a lifetime. The extensive travelling is something she alone would not be able to do, were it not for the aquamaids.

"It's hard work," she comments, "the trips are really your reward."

Kristen finally realized she'd been mir-

Thus the evolution of the Beach Bum. Since then, Kristen has entered other contests but the $25 prize and the ribbon that she won at the county fair represented her biggest achievement to date. Both friends and family lavish their support and encouragement on her. Her mother especially tries to promote her cartooning through magazine contests. "I have watched her grow," commented her buddy Cherie Collins, "from a crum-ball to a great cartoonist!" Though Kristen is not sure yet about art school or a drawing career, she has faith in her talent. Kristen smiles, "I do have a dream." An identical smile on the Beach Bum's face shows approval.

Focusing on the abstract

Her involvement in photography can be traced back to the eighth grade, when she began attending classes. What once Griffen's plans for the future include the pursuit of her interests in family portraiture and continuing to compete in local competition. Utilizing her photographic abilities, she further intends to create her own Christmas card collection. Griffen is quick to point out, however, that her best work is done at her own pace and she is not willing to sacrifice quality in meeting a deadline.

... but somebody's got to do it

"... You see, doctor, it all began when I had this strange dream. I remember that I walked into one of those old brick school houses after ringing the bell next to the door. Then, I sat at the desk in the front of the class and watched all the children file into the room. There must have been fifty of them, girls on one side of the class and the boys on the other side. All of the girls were in pink frilly dresses and they had their hair in braids tied with ribbons. The boys were decked out in shoes, knee socks, knickers, and long sleeved white shirts with little bow ties adjusted just right. The funny thing was that everyone looked so picturesque that I thought it was a scene from a fairy tale.

"I made some vague motion and everyone uniformly took their seats. I was amazed! Work books, text books, and lunches all took their specified place on the corners of the table tops. Then, like a row of dominoes, each student stood up and began to parade past my desk. The first placed a polished red apple right smack in the middle of my desk. The rest of the children followed suit and before long, I was bombarded with a trunk load of red delicious apples! It was really scary. By the time they had taken their seats, I was buried; I could not even move.

"Suddenly, I was alone and I could not breathe under the weight of all those apples! I began to cry for help, hoping that someone would hear me. I then felt a strong hand pulling me up. 'Thank God,' I said. It was the Boonievillie sheriff: A quite handsome young man. He put me on his horse and said, 'Well ma'am, I jes' hope you feel awlright.' I think I mumbled, 'I'm okay,' Then we rode off into the sunset.

"Now isn't that crazy? Sorry, doctor. Isn't that bizarre? I didn't know what to think of it. I'm a teacher, you know, so you may find some connection there. What do you think?"

Students are finding it easier to get higher grades due to two special programs. These students understand what they are studying and how to do well in their work.

One of these organizations is the Learning Assistance Program staffed by Beverly Luckenbill and Gerry Large. This program was started last fall by Evelyn Gidden. At first she only had two students, but by the end of the year she had nine. The second is the Language Skills Development Program. Both share a common goal: find ways to use students' strengths to compensate for their weakness and develop language skills. Brother Steve Johnson and counselor Bernie LeRoy help students in the L.S.D.P. improve their thinking skills.

The L.S.D.P. is open to all grades. Students may be referred by parents, teachers, counselors, or go voluntarily if they need help in a particular subject.

"The Learning Assistant presents information in different ways to help the student with difficult subjects," said Luckenbill.

Freshmen in the L.S.D.P. take the same classes. However they have Johnson for English, Global Studies, and Believing. They also have LeRoy for study methods. Each student has an individualized program.

"The Language Skills Development Program is an intense course and involves more work than the regular freshmen load because of all of the writing and homework," said Johnson. Johnson's teaching is based on variety. "he doesn't just teach one subject for five minutes and move on, he relates the subjects to one another."

"I would rather be in this class than in regular classes because I am learning much more," commented freshman Grace Bannon. The class prepares students to do well for the next three years.

Students in the L.A.P. work on classwork, homework, and remedial work in the academic areas that are most difficult for them.

"My grades have gone up since I have been in the Learning Assistance Program," commented Christine Mills, junior.

Both of these programs have helped many students get through rough times in their high school education. Even though it is hard work, these organizations can help strengthen weaknesses and can make a difference in report cards.

Solace and service

Fast enough to prepare students for College, strong enough to help handle personal problems, able to leap "schedule mixups" in a single bound. . . It's a bird. It's a plane. No: It's the Mitty Counselors.

Opened for student convenience, Counseling and Guidance raised its standards to try and offer better services to students. With a trained staff of professional counselors, Mitty was able to assist students in their educational and career planning as well as helping them with their personal problems. "I think students benefit so much from counselors because they are very understanding and take the time to work out each student's needs," remarked junior Lisa Dutrieuille. Also handling scholarship information, family counseling, work permits, and work experience, counselors at Mitty carried out many responsibilities that otherwise may not have been dealt with.

This year, the department committed itself to fulfilling two main goals. The first was to try and see every student individually before the end of the school year. Counselors accomplished this by scheduling different divisions during a certain time period. This method offered them the chance to see students without much confusion. For example, seniors were given notices in October to set appointments with their individual counselors. In the months of October and November, counselors mainly focused on helping seniors prepare for college by filling out applications, writing letters of recommendation, informing students of possible scholarships, and discussing various college choices. In the following months, counselors met with underclassmen to talk about personal or academic problems, and emphasized looking into colleges and academic interest. This type of system helped maintain order and let counselors focus on one certain area without ignoring the needs of other students. "The counselors set a goal this year to see every one of their counselees," explained counselor Bernie LeRoy, "and we report with pride this goal was reached."

The second goal focused on improving the school's career center. College brochures and catalogs were placed on shelves in the career center, and old ones were renewed. Another improvement was the new COIN (Coordinated Occupational Information Network) machine placed in the career center. This machine offers current, accurate, and easy-to-use occupational and educational information to students. The COIN machine gives insight on career choices for students and also explores other opportunities.

One last problem counselors helped with was aiding students in their schedule mix-ups. Counselors met with students as early as August to discuss their schedule problems.

Co-Curricular Departments

Tony Mercado, Jim Wallace, Judy Ingram, and Richard Hansen take advantage of Counseling and Guidance's resources and services.

With them, the counselors were able to find ways to fulfill each request and, at the same time, meet all the school's requirements. "We were there acting as trouble shooters for the computer's errors," stated Joe Pirzynski, department chairman, "and it gave us a great opportunity to begin discussing students' plans early in the year."

The responsibility and constant demand placed on counselors enabled the Counseling and Guidance Department to raise its standards. Responsibility in the sense that counselors felt it a necessity to steer each student in a positive direction, and students felt the need for guidance throughout the school year. With both the counselors and the students pushing to meet halfway, the quality of a "counselor-student" relationship grew to create a school with positive ideals and goals.

It takes the right stuff

The Random House dictionary defines a teacher as being "a person who teaches or instructs, esp. as a profession." However, the Mitty faculty exceeds this definition.

What does it take to be a teacher?

"To be a good teacher means more than imparting information and facilitating skills in the classroom. It takes an awareness of individual needs, honesty, consistency, and knowledge of the subject matter, being able and willing to give of yourself," answered Catherine Sanders, English teacher. Michael Fallon, religion teacher and Student Activities Director, added, "The love of the subject, love of students and concern for their learning; creativity, innovation, and enthusiasm in the art of teaching."

Most teachers agree a lot of time must be sacrificed; their job can and often does interfere with their personal life, or affects it in some way. For Pat Bowers, English teacher, "teaching is like being a doctor—you don't DO it, you ARE it, so it can't be a '9 to 5' job."

The Mitty faculty also feels the need to be able to endure stress and overcome the "frustration of not achieving 100% success," commented Jack Ramage, vice-principal. Peg Scannell, religion teacher, stressed the importance of a good teacher to be a continual learner. "Good teachers can learn to be better teachers if they not only continue their own education but also are willing to learn from their students."

An essential quality is strictness balanced with a creative sense of humor. English teacher Karen DeMonner practices an "Adolf Hitler system of checks" to make sure her students have homework and class materials. A paper on freshmen's opinions proved the effectiveness yet fairness of her method. Dave Kasler also believes in "tricks for coping." He teases his science students occasionally to spark up chemistry class.

Although many faculty have considered career changes, they come back. Stated Ramage, "I like being in a school with kids and all its related problems." Fallon shows similar dedication. He once moved over to private industry for a year. His pay as senior production manager amounted to $20,000 annually, but he missed the classroom and the students. Fallon decided to return.

Faculty members care about young people and show a willingness to work with the students. "Independence, freedom, and autonomy allow the teachers to be themselves and take time for students," comments Fallon. Thus, "Mitty itself has become an ideal that teachers rise to." Brother Tom Springer stated, "The teachers are professional. They can give and take criticism about their work without getting personal."

the classroom. Sports activities, like intramurals, cheerleading, MTA, Student Government, LIFE, and Campus Ministry offer opportunities for teachers to interact with students.

"Extracurricular activities, such as MTA, are an important experience for both faculty and students," stated Sanders.

Students echo these opinions concerning a teacher's role and the way the staff has surpassed it. Sophomore Micky Hancock commends their "sense of humor, spirit, and casual friendliness. They relate to students in an adult way."

What do students like in the adults they learn from for one or more periods each day? "They should be knowledgeable, and understand student needs," are criteria that junior Angeline Pang goes by. For sophomore Kristen Morgin, a hard class with an interesting teacher is more worthwhile than a boring teacher's easy A.

Faculty devote their lives to teaching, and a personal reward for many is to succeed with their students, and be able to extend beyond the classroom to meet needs. Scannell feels, "Students who have had their lives touched with the affection, shared knowledge and respect of a good teacher pursue education and life with confidence and vigor."

It is the teachers who add to the sense of community and provide a comfortable learning environment.

Beyond the classroom

In the olden days, teachers with beady eyes and stern lips sat upright at their command post, eyeing the Tom Sawyers of the class. A century later, Mitty teachers and students interact beyond the classroom as colleagues, friends, and relatives.

"I've gone to many public schools," noted senior Brenda Broadus, "and outside of class, you can't find teachers anywhere. Teachers are more personal and helpful here." Mitty teachers are involved in sports, clubs, and extracurricular activities, more as participants than as directors. A few have both jobs and kids at Mitty.

America is still shaping up, and Mitty teachers are certainly not old football jerseys in the closet. The Intramurals program involves competition between student and teacher teams. Recommended by the WASC Accrediting Commission, it was started over four years ago. Dave Chaplick first managed it, Dan McCrone took over three years ago, and Dave Brown is the present organizer. Informality requires flag football instead of tackling, but the teams play by the official rules. Volleyball and soccer are also part of the program.

Enthusiasm adds more color to Mitty's black and gold. Yearbookers received the number one award at the Stanford seminar last summer. Jeff House, the "head honcho," was the tag-along advisor ready with ideas, encouragement, and words of wisdom. Trophies were won but friendships were also deepened. House got to know both the old and the new staff members better. Confidential senior Theresa Banchemo, "I was scared and nervous about the class and the seminar. Mr. House made you feel comfortable, and was supportive."

"Different people see LIFE in different ways," says moderator Brother Tom Spring. For some members, LIFE helps them develop leadership qualities. For others, personal talents are discovered. Shared experiences like the seven-day workshop during the summer, were the basis for friendships. "LIFE bridges the generation gap," Spring affirmed.

Foreign Language

"LIFE members are peers, equals."

Student government is a microcosm. The student activities that Director Michael Fallon helps plan allow teachers and students to socialize. "Activities improve the spirit, mood, and school climate. It makes school something to look forward to." Outside the "rigid structure" of class is a chance for students and staff to have fun together.

Beyond the external relationships is an entirely different kind of bond. "We maintain an artificial formality in the classroom," says English teacher Linda Ferrante, referring to son Tony. For them, school and family life are distinct and unrelated. Karen DeMonner treats all her English students the same, eager to help but not giving special attention to relatives, namely stepson Sean.

"I approach the enology club members as adults," says moderator Nick Bridger. Teachers stepped down from the pedestal long ago. Student-teacher partnerships are the heart and soul of sports, pep, and pride.

Math students add up

"It's applicable to everyday situations, and I enjoy putting the logic together. I don't need to think too much," notes Christy Hall, senior, about math, her favorite subject.

The results of an Excalibur survey showed math as the most popular subject. Many students do well at it and found it interesting since there are many different methods for solutions. Students find math intriguing.

"It's interesting," stated Debbie Hayes, junior, "It also requires self-discipline to be patient enough to figure out the right answer."

Math teachers, too, say they continued their studies in mathematics because they have always done well. Teachers would also like to make their class fun so students are encouraged to learn.

"I'd like to make my class interesting. But the student must also go half way," stated E. Abb. Judy James feels students favor math because once they do a problem, it's finished.

"Students often tell me that they do the math homework first because once it's done it's done; whereas with something like English, you have to keep working on writing," notes James.

Another reason involved the advancing technology. In keeping up with math, they keep up with everyday advancements in computers. Computers today are indispensable and math is essential.

"Almost everything we will do in the future will involve math," said Hayes. Students feel since they spend more time with math, they begin to enjoy it.

Academics go olympic

In room 403, three days a week, a group of students and instructors meet and exchange mysterious information. Is it a spy ring or a conspiracy? More likely, it is the members of the Decathlon team, diligently devouring information on science, math, art and English.

In the first year at Mitty, the Decathlon team has been busy recruiting members while at the same time preparing for the regional decathlon held in November. The preparation is difficult, for not only does it involve gaining a general knowledge of several subjects, students must also deliver two speeches, one prepared and one impromptu.

"It is hard work preparing and I spent a great deal of time working on the material for the decathlon," stated Marilyn Reiss, a team member.

It is not only the students who donate time. Gary Braia and Bernie LeRoy, organizers of the program, spent time and energy recruiting students and guest speakers, while teaching some of the necessary material.

"They have put a great deal of effort into this program so that we could have the chance to compete," observed member Danica Augros.

The local competition took place at a high school in each participating region. It was a day long event which included several tests and oral presentations in which each student competed individually. At the end of the day the teams from each school match with against each other in an oral group competition.

Competition is only part of the reason the members of the decathlon were involved. Most feel it was also a worthwhile learning experience.

"I joined to find a way to integrate separate and apparently dissimilar aspects of my education," explained Peter Philipp. These first members also get the experience of being the first to attempt such a program at Mitty.

After this year's competition, the decathlon members intended to evaluate the program and begin preparing for next year. In fact, if the members of this new academic team have their way, "the decathlon will become an established institution at Mitty," proclaimed Noel Charitat.

For love and honors

"The competition for college is getting harder and harder. Taking honors classes looks good on the transcript," notes junior Sean DeMonner.

This is the main reason students give for taking honors classes. Competition for admission to a college is tough. Colleges are demanding math and science, along with the basic four years of English. They are expecting higher grades and Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) scores. As Kathy Nino, a senior, stated, "If we don't prepare for the work in college now, we'll get blown over later."

The fact that parents expect more from children these days was also a reason for honors classes. They want their children to have more advantages than they had. With accelerated classes, parents feel their children will be able to prepare for college.

Students also gave growing technology as a reason. If they don't keep up with advancements, they won't be able to survive in a competitive world. Taking honors classes provides them with extra responsibility and pressure, preparing them for life.

Does taking accelerated classes really help? "It makes a significant difference," said Joe Pirzynski, counselor, who notes that private institutions not only consider grades and test scores, but also the courses a student takes. For example, a student with a 3.5 GPA with honors classes has preference over one with the same GPA and regular courses. Also, the UC system recognizes honors classes by raising the grades by one point. Thus, a "B" in an honors class would be worth four points instead of three.

Students feel they are preparing for the future more effectively by taking honors classes. Their hard work now, they feel, will benefit them in the future.

Rising through repair

“I enjoy working around the students and being able to fix or repair things,” stated Dan Chapman, head of school maintenance, “it’s the paperwork I hate.”

Chapman graduated from Mitty in 1977, and began working during the second semester of his senior year. He attended West Valley College and in the summer of 1980 replaced the head of maintenance Bill Barone. He is in charge of buildings, grounds, and repairs.

Last summer, Chapman and his crew made several changes in the appearance of the school. They renovated the cafeteria, redid the girls’ bathroom in the 200 wing, and refinished the gymnasium floor and Varsity boys’ locker room. They also built a tutoring room, a publication room, sidewalks between the wings, and changed the classrooms by switching the 100 and 400 wings. Painting, carpeting, and roofing were done throughout the entire school. The two trash cans in front of the school were new additions over the summer. However, the summer project work was still not finished. “It’s an endless job. Just when you think you’re finished, something else comes up,” stated Chapman.

Working-hours for the maintenance crew range from ten to twelve hours a day during the summer, and about forty hours per week during the school year. Chapman comments that “none of the hard work and accomplishments would be possible without the crew. Besides repairing things around the school, Chapman also helps with the athletic department and student government.

The greatest reward for Chapman and his crew was the appreciation expressed by students through their pride and respect for their campus.

agony of defeat

It was my first time trying out for the team. I was so nervous. You stood there so calm and serene. My sweats were stiff because they were new. I envied you because your holey sweats showed me you had been through the course before.

The time came for the tryouts. I began to play ball, covering all the strategies I knew. I became engrossed with perfection, and that proved to be my worst enemy. I tried so hard that I made mistakes. I felt all right though because others who had similar experiences supported me. Then it was your turn. You moved with such style and grace that I had to admire you.

After all of us had tried out, the coach said that we had done a terrific job. Unfortunately, he could not take everyone for the team. He began reading the list. My stomach muscles tightened, sweat dripped from my forehead, and I prayed silently. But he didn't call my name.

I was hurt. You stood there bathed in glory. The coach had not only selected you but he had also named you team captain. What a thrill for you, I thought. Deep inside I was really sad. Back in the locker room, congratulations came to those who made it and commendations to those who did not but had at least tried.

The coach left his office at the same time that I was coming out of the locker room. We talked about the upcoming season and the hope for a successful season. He told me that I had room to improve and with some improvement in my ability, I could be a strong candidate for next year. I felt positive with this bit of encouragement and became confident that I could make the team next year.

Tackling problems

Varsity ranks fifth in league, improves on previous season

Despite a tough schedule, the Varsity Football team managed to improve their record of 2-8 last year to 3-7 this year. Ranking fifth in the league, the team was plagued by penalties.

Though many games ended in defeat, the team had some exciting moments. Starting off the season, the Mountain View game resulted in victory, 24-19. A string of losses resulted after this, including a 30-0 loss to Bellarmine and a defeat on Homecoming night, 29-6 against St. Francis. Offense and defense held Sacred Heart for a win of 34-19, but the season ended with a 20-0 loss to Saint Ignatius.

"We should have won the game against Serra and St. Francis," commented Head Coach Dave Brown. "Even though we were dominated on the scoreboard, we were dominant on the field. It was all the penalties that stopped us, not the opposing teams."

Brown explained that their biggest goal for the next season will center on developing greater mental discipline so that small penalties will not cost them the season again.

With a team that consisted of numerous talented players, six students in all were selected for All League awards. Eric Stevenson, Tim Jackson, Rich Tellez were selected for first team, and Mike Mercado, Fred Vaca and Ben Infantino made second team.

Exceptional ability on the field was recognized and awarded at the 1983 Fall Sports Banquet. For his overall performance in the season, Tim Jackson received Most Valuable Player. Eric Stevenson and Ted Morrison were awarded Most Valuable Offensive and Defensive Players. Finally, Fred Vaca received the newest award, the Walt Haniger Academic Award.

Though the season didn't bring as many wins as the team would have liked, players and coaches learned from it and set new goals for next season.

"They had a better win/loss record during a tougher scheduled season than last year," reflected Brown. "In terms of improvement, defense will get better. We'll continue to progress and build for a better team for an excellent season next year."

Making the point

JV, frosh meet team goals; spirit and pride prevail

"Our first goal was to train them to be Varsity Players," explained Junior Varsity Football Coach Bill Hutton. "Our second goal was to teach them to uphold high academic and moral standards. Finally, our third goal was to win games."

The clear highlight of the JV's 2-8 season was the defeat of Bellarmine, 14-0. "It was the first game that the Bellarmine Junior Varsity had lost in two years. They had a 25-game winning streak until we beat them. That was definitely the best part of the season," recalled Hutton. Despite having soundly trounced Mountain View with a score of 20-0, the season ended with a string of losses: St. Francis, 28-0; Sacred Heart, 3-0; and St. Ignatius, 7-6.

The team elected Erik Coca as Best Lineman, Matt Morrison as Best Back, and Todd Engstrom as Most Improved. Sean Stevenson and Chris Flocchini were awarded for their performances by making All-League.

Hutton has high expectations for the future of this team of players. "As a group, they were the greatest kids. I don't think Mitty's had a group of kids as well behaved and ambitious as these. With added weight and strength, their next season will be great," he concluded.

— Shana Waarich —

"If you go by records, we had a terrible season. But, if you go by our goals, we had a great season," commented coach Dan McCrone on Freshmen Football.

The first game of the season started with a 12-0 win over Peterson. The rest of the year was downhill with a 28-6 loss to Bellarmine and a 41-6 defeat to the Saint Francis Lancers. The season ended with a win-loss record of 1-6.

The team credits their unfortunate season to inexperience. "We weren't experienced and we didn't know how to execute plays," said Scott Green, quarterback. Other players agreed.

McCrone and the players did not let their spirit down. Jay Wischmann, Bobby Lopez, McCrone, and others claimed the enthusiasm was always present. McCrone noted that unity and willingness were some of the team's strong points.

Jeff Sakamoto, Stevenson, Kidgell, Lopez, and Green all agreed that next year's goals are to win, improve, and have more fun.

No picnicking here

Girls' varsity starts slowly but ends on winning note

This season was not exactly a picnic for the Girls Varsity Volleyball team. They finished 6-11 in league, winning three of their last four games.

The year, though, was frustrating. But even with the bad times, the girls looked for the silver lining behind their gray cloud. At practice they put forth the dedication to improve their standing. "During practice Alyns pushed us to the limit. We kept up the good spirits and tried to do the school proud," stated Akiko Murphy, senior.

All teams have their stars, and volleyball was no exception. One was Susie Phillips, a junior, the main setter for the team. She also showed leadership and gave encouragement. Seniors Murphy and Lynette Soares were the key servers. Heather Hale and Lisa Raiola, juniors, were strong hitters and blockers alike, moving well in their positions.

At the season's close, the team

improved its style and skill as in the Westmont games. The Monarchs lost two games in twenty minutes to Westmont their first time out. The next time they met, they lost one game and won one but lost the third game. The final score of the third game was 15-11, and the game lasted one hour and forty-five minutes. In between, the girls improved enough to keep Westmont at bay for almost two hours.

This was the first year Alyns Squire coached Volleyball. "I was happy with the improvement and with the hard work; everyday at practice they worked hard," stated Squire. She hopes for a great season next year and more height so they have great blockers as well as spikers. Squire felt she brought the team a different understanding of the game both in precision and team interaction.

Setting it straight

JV's bump their way to the top to place second in the WVAL

Mitty calls a time out; the score is 3-12, Prospect. Monarchs form a huddle, discuss strategy, and spirits are lifted. Can they make a comeback? Yes, the final score: 16-14.

The best characteristic of the Junior Varsity Volleyball team was their ability to come from behind to win. This ability enabled the young team to achieve second place in the WVAL and record a 12-2 season.

"We had an abundance of talent," commented first-year coach Phil Maher. "It was hard making cuts at the beginning of the season."

The team emphasized a four-two offense in which there were four hitters and two setters on the court. "Everybody worked hard, not only in games but also in practices," recalled Sue Grigsby. During each two-hour practice, the team was drilled on their ability to punch, spike, and set the ball.

The team was comprised of ten young athletes, eight of whom were freshman, who had played for at least two years in junior high. Some of the girls strenghtened their game by attending a variety of volleyball camps over the summer. Claudine Marotta attended a clinic held at Santa Clara University where she improved her serving style by varying techniques.

The team also achieved a 12-2 season through teamwork. "We worked together," verified Jodi Min, captain, later elected MVP.

Their ability to come from behind also added to their success. "We played well under pressure," explained Amy Choice.

Throughout the season, the girls learned more than volleyball; they learned how to work together and deal with coaches.

"The team helped me realize that winning is not everything; trying your best is all you can do," commented Marotta.

Running on time

Boys Varsity CC stars slow, improves in second half of season

It was a time of expectations, high hopes, growth and improvement, but it was also a time of disappointment for the Boy's Varsity Cross Country team.

The Monarchs ranked 15 in a field of 21 at the Crystal Springs Invitational, the third of the season. Despite the victories over Branham, 17-46, and Prospect, 25-32, in individual meets, they were defeated by Los Gatos, Del Mar, and Westmont.

Why? "Not enough experience on the varsity level," explained junior Mike O'Connor. The team was composed of three seniors, seven juniors, two sophomores, and two freshmen. Hoping for the best, the seven senior and junior team members represented Mitty at the first meet. However, this strategy was not as successful as hoped. By the third meet Mitty sent representatives from all four grade levels to compete. As a result, they improved their standings. This marked the turning point in the season.

The team varied their practicing routine by running in a number of places and employing a variety of techniques. Working on different geographies, they ran through the woods and hills of countrysides, parks and city streets in addition to the school campus. It was during the practices they worked on their group interaction, each member encouraging others to work their hardest and push their limits. Many attributed their increased success to this group support.

Despite that the season was less than expected, the Varsity Boy's Cross Country team was, "recognized as having potential and running on the heels of Bellarmine and Serra," remarked Coach Michael Fallon.

Young JV's attain 12-1 record, place second in league

"I don't care a lot about the records," remarked Boys JV Cross Country Coach Marty Procaccio. "It's the development of the people that's more important."

With a record this season of 18-18, Mitty came in fourth in WCAL, a two-place leap from last year. Bellarmine, Serra, and St. Francis placed ahead of Mitty.

While the top seven of last year's Frosh/Soph team went to Varsity, the JV runners still had a great deal of potential. Brian Mayerle, John Little, and Paul Davis ranked high in meets. Mayerle came in first in meets at Aragon and Del Mar among others.

Runners competed against other league teams three times. One outstanding meet was the 18-44 victory over James Lick at Alum Rock Park. Another was the defeat of Del Mar, 22-33. According to Procaccio, the St. Joe's Invitational was a 'good day,' with the 24-31 defeat of Aragon. Mitty came in third in the Crystal Springs Invitational.

Statistics, however, do not reflect every aspect of a team. Procaccio wants his runners to develop a "sportsmanship and camaraderie" from being on the team. "The spirit of our teammates is incredible. We are very cooperative at meets," said Steve Marconi.

-Li Miao-

The Frosh/Soph team placed fourth or better at every invitational meet, competing against 30 to 40 teams.

During pre-season, Coach Procaccio concentrated on workouts that promoted slow, long distance running to prepare for pre-season meets against Del Mar, Leigh, and Westmont High. The team placed fourth second, third, and third against the seven teams that comprise the WCAL. The team took fourth in the Crystal Springs Invitational; won 37-22 over Leigh High School; lost 20-15 against Prospect; 36-22 against Aragon; and 44-18 against Lick.

This year's season was successful in itself. "Our record wasn't the greatest, but the team showed real potential to be an asset to next year's Varsity squad," commented team captain Dave Gaskell.

Improving with age

Girls' cross country blossoms, moves to fifth place in CCS

Like many things, Varsity Girl's Cross Country grows better with time.

The team pulled last year's eighth ranking in CCS to a solid fifth.

The team began its season with a burst of energy, winning both of their pre-season games against Lick and Aragon High Schools. This vitality remained throughout their league play where they were unbeatable except against Los Gatos, Saint Francis and Leigh.

Varsity went on to CCS finals where their team spirit and their running strength enabled them to place fifth.

"It was a really special feeling to win both of the invitationals. The Granada invitational was the best, however, because we placed first out of twenty-seven other schools," stated junior Kitty O'Doherty.

"During the season we had a great deal of team spirit which raised throughout the ranks," added Kim Kistler.

Many of the members of this closeknit team plan to return to continue their climb up the CCS rankings.

"We have really improved. We only have a few more tough competitors left, and when they are gone we will go straight to the top," exclaimed sophomore Deirdre Kelly.

They thought they could, they knew they could. And Girl's Junior Varsity Cross Country team went all the way to second place in their league.

The young Junior Varsity team, composed of mostly freshmen and sophomores, trained strenuously so that their pre-season wins over Lick and Aragon High Schools served as fair notice of the team's winning style.

They won all of their 13 meets except for those run against Los Gatos High School. This record gave the Junior Varsity second place in their league, second only to the Los Gatos team.

The team also competed in several invitationals, the most notable one being the Crystal Springs Invitational where they placed third.

Other aspects of the team were their pride and spirit. As a young team they showed great vitality and unity.

"Everyone on the team was working together to do the best they could. Of course there was internal competitiveness, but it was all very friendly," explained sophomore Cathy Norbutas.

"They matured throughout the season and by the end were a first-rate team," concluded Coach Marty Procaccio. "They have a great deal to be proud of."

Girls Varsity clinches second in WCAL; JV's set up for first year

"The team had more depth than it's ever had in the past four years I've been here," stated senior Lisa Malzone, reflecting on the Girl's Varsity team's 6-1 league record.

"The talent was extremely deep, and that explains our record," stated Head Coach Joan Sullivan. "For the first time Mitty took second clearly by themselves with no ties. It was a gratifying season for me in spite of the fact that I had surgery."

Kevin Pacheco, assistant coach during Sullivan's medical absence, stepped in and took over the Varsity team. Outstanding wins were made by all four singles players: Lynn Gohmann, Elizabeth Nichols, Lisa Malzone, and Candy Plevyak. The number one doubles team consisted of the Alberto sisters: Monica and Denise were undefeated.

Still, the overall record of 6-1 was not enough to make CCS. The doubles team of Plevyak and Nichols took the bronze medal in league playoffs and won the consolation round. A silver medal would have taken them to CCS.

The year was also marked by a thaw in relations with long-time rival Los Gatos. Now the two teams root for each other, and the Albertos practiced with the Los Gatos team.

Sullivan is optimistic about next season, hoping to qualify for CCS. "They were the most talented group of tennis players we've ever had at Mitty," she reflected.

-Theresa Banchemo-

"Considering we didn't have a full-time coach, we had a good year," commented Karen Leigh on the Girls Junior Varsity Tennis Team.

With Joan Sullivan, Varsity Tennis Coach, out for so long, and JV Coach Kevin Pacheco replacing her, the JV girls were left out in the cold. This, however, did not stop them.

"For only having a little time to practice, I think we did well, and I know we had fun," agreed sophomore Julie Mills.

Sullivan was pleased with the progress the team made since this was the first year there was a Junior Varsity team. Mills, sophomore Grace Tai, and freshman Maria Guzik were noted as the best players, though Sullivan noted that the whole team did well.

Madmen go crazy

Varsity Boys near top of heap; second only to Bells in WCAL

With a season record of 8-3-1, madmen Varsity Soccer placed second in WCAL and made it into the playoffs.

"I wanted to get the team ready for WCAL and did not care about pre-season wins and losses," explained Mosunic.

"I remember one time we had practice at six in the morning to get our skills together," added senior Charlie Balquist.

The hard work in pre-season paid off. The team's goal was to place fourth in the league so as they could participate in the playoffs. The team surpassed this objective, placing second, behind their chief nemises, Bellarmine.

The St. Francis game was, perhaps, the most memorable for the Mitty madmen. When half-time came the team trailed 1-0 but as the second half picked up Mitty gave its all. In the last five minutes of the game the boys came back and clenched victory.

"We played on 100 heart," remarked Jim Kyle. "We showed how unselfish play wins over selfish play." This win gave the team a CCS playoff berth. It was their second win over St. Francis during the season.

"Man for man they (Bellarmine) had more skill than us. We had to use speed and aggressive pressure to compete with them," recalled Mosunic.

Nonetheless, the madmen's playoff position led to personal notoriety for four team members: Jeff Silver, Jim Kyle, Scott Standfill, and Dave Kurze. They all gained slots on All-League teams.

As for next year, the team will lose fourteen players. Only two starters will be returning. Mosunic feels it will be difficult to replace those leaving, especially the All-League players, but he is optimistic. According to Mosunic next season will be a rebuilding one but he hopes they will be a playoff team.

The Boys Freshmen Soccer met up with some stiff competition throughout the season, but they accomplished their goals of refining techniques and building team unity.

The pre-season 4-0 record sparked optimism in the team as they prepared to face the regular season. The team opened the season with losses to Bellarmine, St. Francis and Serra, but the tables soon turned. Mitty rallied back to beat Sacred Heart, 3-2; clenched victory over Riordan, 5-0; defeated St. Ignatius, 3-1; and slipped by Bellarmine, 3-2. The winning streak finally ended with a 0-0 tie with St. Francis. At a second match against Riordan, the team avenged their previous loss with a convincing 7-0 victory.

The team fell short of its goal of gaining one of the top three slots in the WCAL. Instead, Mitty settled for a fourth place ranking. Additionally, the team didn't feel they achieved the degree of aggressiveness that they had hoped for.

"As the team members get to know each other, we will improve and be a better team," explained

Brian Blatz confidently.

-Mark Scully-

Boys J.V. Soccer kept up their tradition of a strong season, ending with a 16-3-2 record and placing third in the WCAL.

Coach Al Waddington felt the boys worked as a team to a strong degree. He felt the team's spirit was good, although it was full of ups and downs.

"We came together when we had to," agreed junior Sean DeMonner.

Waddington felt the team improved this year.

"Skill-wise, they were better," stated Waddington. There were many experienced returnees and a talented number of new sophomores.

Next year, Waddington's goals are to win bigger in the league and to have even a greater amount of teamwork. New comer Franco Finstad also felt the team would develop more dedication and seriousness next season.

Girls Cinch CCS

Varsity soccer upsets Saratoga, wins CCS title for female first

In the last minute of double overtime Kelly Rogers made contact with the ball, sending it flying past the Saratoga soccer players, making her team CCS champions with a final score of 1-0.

This championship was not only an accomplishment for the team but for the entire school. By beating three time champion Saratoga, the Girl's Varsity Soccer team became the first girls team, in the history of the school, to win the CCS title.

To win the title took a great deal of work on the part of all team members. The team practiced twelve hours every school week and also met during vacations to workout. As a team, they were also expected to eat right and get a good night's rest.

Their attention to details in practice led to 15-3-2 season which made them first in the WCAL and eligible for CCS.

In CCS playoffs the team conquered Palo Alto, Menlo Atherton, and Leland, placing them in the finals against undefeated Saratoga High.

Their final game, played during winter break, proved the team's offensive and defensive strength, as they held Saratoga from scoring and in overtime were able to make the only score in the game.

"The game against Saratoga really topped our season," commented junior Candy Plevyak. "We were ready to win and we 'made all the right moves'."

More than technical ability made the team champions. Their team work continued to develop through the season and made the difference in the play-offs.

"In the beginning we were a lot of players but it wasn't til the playoffs that we really got together and worked as a team," explained senior Wendy Inouye.

One event which really helped pull the team together was a retreat that they participated in. Conducted by Campus Ministry, the retreat was designed to make the team members more aware of each other.

Rounded out by an able offensive squad the team made a total of 54 goals in season play and only had 12 against them.

For several of the players, soccer did not end at the CCS finals. Cornelius and two of her teammates, Brandi Chastain and Kelly Rogers, made the all state team. Chastain and Cornelius also made all-league along with sophomore Lara Liggio.

"From the beginning, I pictured this team winning CCS. They worked hard and developed along the way thus, they became the best," concluded Norbutas.

Kicking off

What's the count? One from the top and JV girls look toward Varsity "Fantastic! I'm pleased." The 12-1-1 record was a thrilling victory for Coach Bobby Norbutas and the Girls JV soccer team. Were it not for one loss and one tie, they would have had an undefeated season.

A total of twelve challenging and competitive teams were defeated. One notable game was the 11-0 victory over Peterson. Mitty also played St. Francis three times and defeated them all three times. A disappointing tie with Leland should, according to Norbutas, have been a victory; Mitty was dominant on the field for most of the game. During the entire season, 53 goals were made with only nine against. Even during pre-season trials, Norbutas noticed a lot of talent and potential in the group of sixty girls. When the JV division was shaped into a team of two juniors, eight sophomores, and six freshmen, Norbutas stated his expectancies straight forwardly. All players had to play three positions to develop versatility. From game to game, the team worked on their weaknesses.

Practice included specialized drills in shooting, travelling, and end scrimmage. Shooting is a target for improvement next year. Norbutas commended the team's great defense on the field. Sue Grigsby, Amy Choice, Buffy Goodman, and Molly Silver were invaluable to the team and kept the enthusiasm running high. Yet, the girls worked as a unit, not really as individuals.

"Everyone supported one another. There were always at least three people open and available on the field," explained Norbutas.

Not only were the girls strong athletes, they were good sports as well. No swearing or backtalk to referees was allowed during competition. If the other team played roughly, this was discussed rationally and open-mindedly.

Norbutas smiled with anticipation as he spoke of the future: "I look forward to next season."

Varsity Basketball shows spirit institutes strong group effort

"I feel we did good because we had pride in ourselves and determination to work at being the best we could be," commented Coach Rick Petrich.

The Varsity Boys Basketball team and coach felt they did their best although not all the scores showed it. The season ended with an 11-14 record, but the Monarchs usually lost by only a few points.

The team, however, kept up their spirit. "We were enthusiastic," stated junior Matt Haniger. "The team was always enthusiastic. We enjoyed each other's company and worked together to make us the best team we could be," agreed Petrich.

The season started out well, but wins started turning to defeats always by only a few points. Petrich noted they were always close and determined in the very last minutes of play. An example of this was the last Bellarmine game. Through the night there was always a difference of up to six points. In the last minutes the Monarchs suffered three fouls in a row, ruining chances of a win.

The highlight of their season was the team's visit to Seattle, Washington. "It was a great unifying experience. We were 800 miles from home with a single purpose: represent Mitty High School to the best of our ability," Petrich described. "I was never more proud of a group of young men that I've been associated with."

The only complaint Petrich and the players had was that the student body was not supportive enough. He expressed his wish that everyone could come to all the games, not just those against Bellarmine.

Still, after the buzzers had rung, after the crowd had left, and after the overviews, the team's pride and spirit did not die.

Aiming high

Team notes lack of organization but rebounds in spirit and effort

"The whole program relies on teaching fundamentals and to prepare players for Varsity Basketball," stated Coach Chris Hawkins.

Some members of the JV Boys Basketball team were unable to attend the practices at the beginning of the season because they were on the football team. So the season started out slowly with much to learn. Although they won their first game, they lost to Mills and Capuchino high schools. The team attributed these losses to a lack of organization. After their confrontation with Bellarmine in league play, the team discovered that they needed to improve their organization. They then faced Sacred Heart: "they weren't much better talent wise, but they were well-coached," remarked Hawkins.

The battle against Riordan went to a dead heat, the team losing by only one basket. This game heightened the team's morale and provided them with increased confidence. The JV's also fought Bellarmine in a tough battle but lost. The team attributed this disappointment to a previous string of losses that lowered the team's spirit.

"You can't measure our performance by wins and losses, but you can measure it by how well we played," reflected Hawkins.

Hawkins felt the team members gained valuable experience in techniques as well as teamwork that would aid them in their Varsity playing next year.

Frosh teams improve record, prepare for JV year

Improvement was the thing the freshman basketball teams did the best. Their offense during the second half of the season proved to be more efficient and more confident. The boys began to adjust their defense with every team in the WCAL. Basketball coach Rob Kommas mentioned, "I wish the records could show improvements." Successfully, a main goal was accomplished: "to improve skills."

"Everyone knows the A team is better than the B team." According to the philosophy of freshman basketball, this is untrue; the teams were divided equally. "The goal of equal division was to get lots of people lots of playing time," commented Coach Kommas. On the court the A's and B's had the same skills. Yet on and off the court their personalities were quite different. "The A's are quiet, the B's are much more outgoing and creative," commented A team head coach Ron Nicoletti.

As in previous years, coaches saw the season more as a chance to hone and develop skills rather than go for the strong win-loss record. Daily practices and constant workouts aimed at developing latent skills and abilities. Even then, the teams managed to improve on last year's no-win season and sharpen skills at the same time.

The freshmen had many skills. They were efficient defenders. They would not let a bad offense game affect their defense. The players were consistent in free-throws and always managed to find some energy left to continue a tough game. Mentally they wanted to win and physically they paid for it: diving after balls, taking charges and running into crowds were some incidents the freshman had to overcome to save the game.

"We have better talent with more height and quickness this year," noted Nicoletti. With the talent seen by the freshman, next year's Junior Varsity looks promising.

Unity and victory

JV Girls first in league; preview talent for Varsity

With only one loss in league play, Girl's JV Basketball triumphed because of their togetherness as a team.

"We always worked with each other, both in games and in practices," stated junior Michele Alexander.

The team began to work together from their first practice. Working both on team and individual fundamentals, Coach Jan Weisberg attempted to condition the players to work as a team.

"I tried to encourage confidence in the players and we worked on communication skills," explained Weisberg.

The training techniques paid off in pre-season games where the team's record was 5-1, and later in season where their record was 13-1. The best game of the season, according to Coach Weisberg, was the team's 46-44 victory over Los Gatos.

ted on our ball handling skills."

"It was the best game we ever played," added Michele Jackson. "We were really prepared for it."

Varsity players also felt the JV's playing was superb. "They played as well as we did," stated junior Tania Tilley. "It will be great to have them on Varsity next year."

Most team members agreed the commitment toward a common goal combined with the hard drills resulted in the team's string of victories. Several players and Weisberg commented on the camaraderie that helped cement the team's dedication to work for higher goals and re-commit themselves when difficulties sprung up. A feeling of family enveloped much of the team's efforts.

"They were a truly awesome team," concluded Weisberg. "They could be described as having a calm confidence and a lot of character."

Girls take second at Santa Cruz defeat St. Francis in a thriller

The ball was in their court.

Girls Varsity Basketball challenged other CCS league teams with energy and enthusiasm, finishing the season 13-1.

A great triumph for the team was its second place ranking in the Santa Cruz tournament. That's a few steps up from last year. The first game against Prospect seemed more of a challenge than expected, but the girls pulled together and won by eight points. With an eleven-point deficit at the half, the St. Francis game did not look promising. However, adrenaline levels surged and led to Mitty's victory, 49-44.

Kim Thronson and Sue Linney were team captains. Three of the highest scorers were Julie Johnston, Susie Phillips, and Kim Hackbarth. Phillips played an aggressive defense.

Being a young team compared to the others in the league was a drawback sometimes: "We're older than last year," said Hackbarth, "but we haven't really matured yet." She believed this lack of experience contributed to their fouling during their last game against Westmont.

Of the starting five, only one was a senior. Two were juniors, and two were sophomores. Mitty's loss of seniors next year will be slight, and the returning players will have another season's experience to benefit from.

The team changed structurally since last year. Because positions in the starting five were more stable this year, subs did not play as much. This drew the five closer together.

Keeping on Track

Varsity shifts direction; F/S draw from cross-country

"Our greatest goal was to survive," chuckled Marty Proccacio, Boys Varsity Track coach, "We just took it one day at a time."

The Boys Varsity Track Team was composed mainly of juniors and sophomores, with a mere sprinkling of seniors. Proccacio hoped to gain strength from the juniors while grooming the sophomores. The team was faced with problems because not enough boys tried out for the team this year.

Therefore, they worked at improving. "It took some speed and time work," remarked Proccacio, "Since the weather was good, we were able to do that." The strong points of the team were the long and triple jumps.

"Beating Riordan was great," recalled Proccacio, his voice laced with excitement, "We only had ten guys out there against their sixty-five."

Although Proccacio admitted that winning was extremely satisfying, there were other factors of equal importance. "Living up to our goals and setting new sights was very important," commented Proccacio, "The team ran one hundred percent."

— Paula Calderon —

A rainy pre-season put a damper on the Boys Frosh/Soph track last year. But with the early spring this year, the track team got off to a "normal" season with "normal" practices. Ninety runners came out for track, with an even 45-45 sex division.

The Frosh/Soph team ended with a record of 4-2 last year. "With good sprinters and distance runners, we should improve our record this year," mentioned Head Coach Marty Proccacio.

Members Sheldon Piumarta and David Gaskell, brought, from a successful Cross Country season, strong sprinting techniques. Many distance runners came from cross Country. Freshman Gerard Hernandez made a great performance in Cross Country, coming in 9th in the nation for the two-mile race.

This year, the team was a different make-up.

"Last year, we had good jumpers, this year we are strong in the throwing events, sprints and the distance runs," stated Proccacio. The team expected tough competition from Westmont, Los Gatos, and Leigh.

Sprinting on spirit

Girls track vies for top In WVAL track meets

Remember that line "Mitty runs high on school pride" boldly emblazoned on Jog-a-thon T-shirts last year? Shirts and sweatshirts that turned up for track practice daily carried the same message.

The turnout for girls track was outstanding this year. About eighty people in the men's and women's divisions attended the season's first practice in February. A month later, after other sports seasons had ended, more athletes signed up, bringing the total to ninety.

During the first week, members chose one of the three groups: distance, sprinting, or weights. If some were still unsure about where they fit in, coach Marty Procaccio and assistant coaches conducted short tests to determine where individual abilities lay. This system worked well in "putting people where they could help the team," felt Procaccio.

The type of coaching techniques used depended on the group. Distance people work on stamina, while the sprinters tend to aim for speed. Workouts are varied to combat the tedium that can result from continuous running. The weight group concentrates on shot put and discus throwing postures.

"My style was to work hard and to discipline ourselves," Procaccio asserted.

Last year, the girls finished third in a league of seven: Del Mar came in first. Of the thirty or so team members last year, only two were seniors. The large number of returns this year added to the team's experience and enthusiasm. Notable "veteran" runners were Kim Kistler, Deirdre Kelly, and Tori Weisberg.

Procaccio was confident about the team's strength as a whole. No weaknesses came readily to mind. Other league teams expected to be challenged were Los Gatos and Leigh.

"We're going to have extremely good competition in meets," said Procaccio.

Girls Varsity aims for a second league title

Girls Varsity Softball was back and better than before.

In pre-season, the team won all of its games, beating one hapless opponent 14-0. Showing they planned to dominate the league, they worked hard during practice. The season promised to be highly competitive, but the girls had hopes of going all the way to first in the CCS.

Seven starters returned: senior Sue Linney; juniors Lisa Tenerelli, Sara Hansell; sophomores Brandi Chastain Tiffany Cornelius, Kim Hackbarth, Jennifer Johnston and Sue Phillips. The team also picked up some new members, Lara Liggio, Kris Kleinheintz and Renee Badua. Kendra Iretton graduated, but Phillips and Badua took over pitching duties.

"We have a good defense this season," commented Tiffany Cornelius. "Renee and Susie have been practicing and have gone to pitching clinics," remarked Coach Josie Reguero. The varsity received coaching lessons from Coach Pete Petrinovich. Last year Petrinovich helped out the team and coached the JVs. This accounted for the strength displayed this season.

Last season, the girls were WVAL champs. They made it to the CCS semi-finals but were defeated by Pioneer. This year their goals were just as high.

"I think we'll surprise people because no one thinks we'll do well," predicted Cornelius as the season began.

"I feel that the girls have a great chance of capturing the title again," predicted Reguero.

JVs Move On

Debbie Gaskell throws the ball during a pre-game workout.

Numbers swell with members as team toughens drills.

"Practice makes perfect," and practice they did.

Trying to beat last year's season record of 9-3, the Girl's Junior Varsity Softball team was improving through extensive practices. Coach Pete Petrinovich and Assistant Coach Mike Dean were working hard to make the team even better this year. With tryouts in mid-January, the team had more time to work on its skills and find a sense of unity.

"If we learn the basics," said Petrinovich, "the winning will take care of itself."

The practices included warm-up exercises, running, throwing, and drills stressing double-plays, triple-plays, sliding, and base running, ending a one-and-a-half to two-hour practice with "greenbays." This unusual activity lined up players in six rows, had them run in place with "high knees" for three minutes, or until a coach yelled "fanny" or "belly," at which time the girls would sit down not-so-gracefully or flounder onto their stomachs as quickly as possible, only to get up again and continue running. This daily workout explores every aspect of the game and prepares them to play well in a game situation.

Yet, the improved talents of a group of athletes would not help them win unless they worked as a team, and they did. Near the beginning of the season, the JV's won second place in the Gilroy Tournament involving 16 teams. "It was funny to see the other teams chewing gum, wearing jewelry, and not having a consistent uniform," commented junior Sara Mordecai. "Our strictness about things like that made you feel like you were on a real team; and it makes you work harder."

The coaches also took time out of their daily practices to focus on different weaknesses so that the team was continually improving. With 18 games scheduled for the season, the JV's proved their talents and gained experience. Looking forward to the next season with high expectations, Petrinovich hopes to "have fun and keep the program going."

Weather they win

Sun brightens chances for a Varsity victory

The WCAL was bound to have a big surprise with this year's Varsity Boy's Baseball team. Everything was in favor of the team. Practice started early with the pleasantly mild weather in January. The two best pitchers, junior Mark Demsky and senior Kevin Christman, returned, along with many talented players, and the team was geared up for the year.

Last year, the team missed being in CCS by only a half game. If one game hadn't ended in a tie, the team would have made the playoffs. This year's team felt confident about making the playoffs. Coach Bill Hutton was proud of having such depth with skilled players.

"There are sixteen players on the team, and all sixteen are good," he commented. The Players agreed.

"Hutton could take the people who don't start, put them in the game, and our team could be just as effective," said Demsky whose personal goal was to be named All League CCS.

Most of all, the team drew on the spirit needed to have a successful season. Hutton felt there was a great deal of enthusiasm among the players. The team too, felt spirit was an essential factor. Everyone encouraged each other, and as Demsky said, "when one person is down another person will pick them up right away."

Rich McLaughlin remembered an incident when the players were really united. The team had gone on a ropes course where they had to get over a twenty-foot wall with only the help of each other. McLaughlin felt they really worked together and showed unity.

All in all, Varsity Baseball was prepared for a successful season, hoping to be "the surprise team of '84," speculated Demsky.

JV aim for title repeat; frosh learn the ropes

After last season's first place, Junior Varsity Baseball anticipated another winning season.

Coach Ron Nicoletti hoped to win the league again. Team spirit was high, and the members of the team seemed to get along well.

"There is a lot of joking around before and after practices and games," commented Junior Ted Wertzberger. "Even at school during the day."

Practices included a lot of running and hitting drills. Infielders spent much time working on bunt defense, while outfielders took fly balls and practiced long throws.

"It takes a lot of dedication because we practiced six days a week, including holidays," stated Wertzberger. "The players must make some sacrifices such as no vacations."

Two tough competitors were Serra and St. Francis. However, the team had several good players, including Tim Pardi, Steve Mannina, and Ryan Seto.

"Our main goal this year is to have the team players develop into Varsity players," commented Nicoletti.

— Patricia Curran —

They may be new on the high school baseball scene, but the freshman baseball boys have potential. Eighteen players were chosen from a strong season turnout, and fourteen of them formed the backbone of the team. "I'm impressed with the pitchers the most," said Coach Bill Abb. Last year there were two pitchers, this year there are six.

Last year was Abb's first as coach. The team finished third in the WCAL with a 6-6 record. One of last year's freshmen advanced to Varsity this year, while eight continued on in JV. Abb expects at least fourteen of his present team to advance to JV or Varsity levels next year.

Errors were to be expected at the beginning of the season, but Abb and assistant coach and alumnus Randy George stressed the importance of learning from mistakes. Abb's philosophy: "I hope the errors will be made now, so they won't be made later on."

Serra, Bellarmine, St. Francis, and St. Ignatius have been the hard-to-beat teams in the league. But the thrill of competition made the boys look forward all the more to the season's games.

Abb was also optimistic about his own coaching experience, "This year I know the ins and outs of my job."

Varsity Golf looks for enjoyment not victory

"This year's golf team had more promise than last year," commented Coach Dan McCrone.

The Varsity Golf team was comprised mostly of freshmen and sophomores. This number of underclassmen who went out for golf was expected to improve greatly.

"I feel that last year was a building season, and that this year will be much better," stated four-year coach McCrone. Last year the golf team finished 6 out of 7. McCrone hopes to finish around fifth place with an outside shot at fourth.

The first match was a practice round on February 27. The golfers played all matches at Tularcitos Golf and Country Club. Practice was held twice a week on Mondays and Fridays.

McCrone sees golf as a game that is fun and not so aggressive. Leadership, manners, and athletic ability are some aspects he looks for in his players.

Although McCrone hopes for a rather good season, team members have high team spirit. Freshman Rick Norbutas commented, "Hopefully we will do great this season and maybe even finish first."

Varsity works with new players; JV finish second season

After losing the top six Varsity players, Varsity Coach Joan Sullivan wasn't sure how well the team would do this year.

"I am very encouraged that we will go through this period more comfortable than anticipated," stated Sullivan. "This will be a season of rebuilding and regrouping."

Over forty boys showed up for tryouts, the largest group yet. They were divided into the Varsity and Junior Varsity. Kevin Pacheco joined the staff as a fulltime Junior Varsity coach. Having Pacheco, Sullivan was able to work exclusively with the Varsity team.

The Varsity faced a tough schedule in the WCAL. After coming in third in league last year, Sullivan felt the team would be competitive and finish in the middle. They had to face tough pre-season matches against Westmont, Cupertino and Mountain View.

Strong returning Varsity members consisted of John Little, Steve Baugher and Mike Helwig. Grant Gingerich, sophomore transfer student from Harbor High School, also brought his talent and skills to earn a high position on the team.

"Doubles team members need to have a great feeling for their partner," stated Sullivan. What better partner than your brother? Bill and Bob Mannina are perfect examples of a remarkable sibling team. With Bill and Bob Mannina, each playing their first season, they are looking forward to a prosperous season.

— Kirsten Kaercher —

With guts and determination, the JV boy's tennis team hit the courts for its second year.

Expanding from a five-man team last year, whose record was 3-2, to the present seventeen players, the program progressed with speed and enthusiasm.

With ten matches set up for the season, Coach Kevin Pacheco had a positive outlook on the season.

The program had run into some problems which entailed the sports budget and the court.

"So far, we've had time just getting balls much less anything else that is needed," commented Pacheco. Court space was low and caused the Varsity and JV to set up an alternating schedule for their use.

The JV consisted mostly of freshmen with some sophomores. "This will give everyone plenty of time to improve and eventually move up to Varsity," said Pacheco. "With the outstanding players I see now I think we're going to have a promising, if not an inspirational, season."

Playing the game

You have to do it for more than a ball and a uniform

Some athletes desire money, others yearn for recognition, and still others want for glory. Why would someone with little of these play?

Because they love the game.

These qualities are indicative of the Mitty athlete. Coaches, staff, and student alike agreed that sports is played at Mitty for personal satisfaction rather than public acclamation and glory. It is clear that achieving excellence is the primary goal in the mind of an athlete. "I don't care about recognition. It is just fun and the people are great to play with," remarked Cindy Cimino, softball, basketball, and volleyball player.

Not only did Cimino play in the Mitty program, she was also involved in outside leagues. Such involvement and dedication was widespread. Charlie Balquist, Varsity soccer player, Ron Mifsud, football and baseball player, among others, were also active members of other teams.

"It started in elementary school. My dad got me interested in soccer. I just kept playing in and outside of school," added Balquist.

To master one sport is difficult enough, but to excell in two and sometimes three others could be considered miraculous. Such was the challenge faced by a great number of Mitty sportsmen and women. Often times the only thing that prevented a student from dabbling in each of Mitty's sports was the fact that they couldn't complete one season before another began.

"For me it came naturally . . . its not that hard, except with school because you play all year around," explained Cimino.

With such dedication to a sport one may think that education has taken a back seat to athletics. Not so says Mifsud. High school is where it will stop for most players. Most athlete's career goals did not include the pursuit of professional sport contracts. Wisely, they realize that although they excell in their respective sports the odds against their gaining professional contracts are against them.

Recognizing these odds Adrian Valdez hoped eventually to go pro. "I want to turn professional for the money." With Valdez's status as an all league player he was certainly well on his way.

Another element that attracted students to the sports program was the social benefits of being on a team.

"There is always someone on the team you don't know and I got to know them because of the sport," reflected Mifsud.

Being a member of the team allowed a player to meet and become close friends with people they would not otherwise have had the opportunity to meet.

Champion (chām pē ũn) noun

1. One who defeats all others in competition to be called the best: "The Mitty team worked and earned the right to be called champion." 2. That condition resulting from teamwork and unity: "When I coach I wait for them to become a team. When that happened I knew they would accomplish anything and everything." 3. A person or team that channels all physical and emotional energies in order to accomplish a determined goal: "Each one of these girls gave 100%. They really became a unit." 4. Persons who concentrate on the attainment of a single goal to glorify themselves and the institution they represent: "I think they understood that they were playing for their school just as much as for themselves."

Organization is chaos

Winston Smith is not the only one having a rough time in 1984. Here is George Orwell's untold tale about Smith's teenage son:

Big Brother's domineering but fatherly face stared out of the huge wall posters at the students solemnly filing into the classrooms without a noise.

Homeroom is not what it used to be, Justin Smith thought, as he carefully buttoned his government-issued, olive-green sweater. Upon hearing the brisk, militant steps of the teacher, Justin's eyes quickly darted toward the front of the classroom. Thirty pairs of docile eyes followed the teacher as he moved toward the podium.

"Bulletin time," he announced crisply. "The Club will be meeting today in the auditorium at thirteen o'clock. All students must attend. Be certain to bring records of all pastimes and activities since the last meeting." He turned on the television set. "Big Brother will now deliver an address to his young subjects and future citizens of Oceania."

Citizens, Justin thought sarcastically. Even at school there was no freedom or choice available. He pretended to be mesmerized by the stocky, bearded face on the screen. Thoughtcrime probably ran in the family, Justin laughed to himself, but he could not help feeling bitter towards the fascist system. Once, he had discovered a censored book about clubs and organizations at Mitty High School in a dusty, forgotten corner of the school library. There used to be something for everyone. Students pursued whatever interests they fancied and, because of this, felt unique and fulfilled.

Justin looked at his worn, olive-green slacks. It was true; everyone "belonged" now but they "belonged" to a group that fostered ignorance. Talent was no longer something explored, but exploited. The Club (of course there was only one) conducted meetings and trips simply to drain out every last ounce of individuality.

The click of the television switch aroused Justin. Code 14502-A of the Minitruth High Handbook suddenly popped into his mind. Justin mentally slapped himself. Such thoughts were ungood. He resignedly pushed himself off his chair and followed the other olive-green uniforms out of the classroom.

Enology

ome things improve with age. Like fine wines, the Enology Club has matured over the years.

With "more participants, more grapes, easier harvest, better club meeting time, and widespread enthusiasm," the club marked its tenth anniversary, noted moderator Nick Bridger.

"The Enology Club has offered me a chance to enjoy and understand the complete process of wine making; from the vine to the bottle," expressed senior Cassandra Floyd.

The grapes were harvested before their full ripeness because of the threat of rains. Thus, grapes lacked full maturity and a few alumni spent October 4 at Stony Ridge Vineyards in Pleasanton picking grapes. After the harvest the grapes were sent through a de-stemming machine, removing stems and crushing grapes. One hundred pounds were crushed per person. Students returned to school and the grapes were evenly distributed and placed in large containers.

The next step was fermentation. Sugar and brewer's yeast were added to the grapes to kill the wild yeast. Each day for a week the students stirred the ingredients and took hydrometer readings which measured the sugar and alcohol content within the wine.

After the fermentation process, the skins were separated from the "free run" wine and brought to Bridger's home. The skins were pressed for extra juice. Bridger's own operation consists of a grape press and an aging and bottling cellar. From October to May the students siphoned their wine to remove sediment, commonly expressed as racking.

"It was a lot of hard work, but it paid off," stated senior Carolyn Brilla. In May, Bridger went to students' homes to bottle the wine.

This process was completed by siphoning the wine into clean containers and corking the bottles. The final step was an aging process before the wine could be consumed when the students reached the age of twenty-one. Each student was able to make their own label for their wine.

"Wine making is a parent-student activity," commented Bridger. Because most of the wine making was done at home, students needed parental permission before joining.

At the end of the process, awards were given out to the most enthusiastic grape picker, most enthusiastic sensory evaluator, and the vinegar award.

Enology is not merely a study of wine and its production. It is a lesson in cooperation and patience. When the final test of these two disciplines came, the students passed with flying colors. "Being in Enology gave me a better understanding of wine making

ith a bang of the drums and the blast of a horn, the band set its goals.

The director of the band, Frank Oddo, wanted the band to be more involved at masses and liturgies.

"I think it'd be more advantageous for them to get the experience. Also, it would add more color to the liturgies," said Oddo.

A change this year was the tempo of the alma mater. With the quickening of the song, there were hopes of involving more people in the singing. The majority of the instruments were flutes, drums, clarinets, saxophones, and trumpets, each student practicing an average of an hour to an hour and a half each day.

The band also played at other places besides school. They visited the Veteran's Hospital in Palo Alto and intermediate schools such as Sacred Heart, St. Joseph's and St. Justin's.

The band, however, did not stop its limits in the Bay Area. During the spring they went down to Los Angeles in an "exchange program" with two Southern California high schools: Serra and Chaminade, isneyland was also graced with the sound of the Mitty band.

"Start at 65 Angie! Please play the soprano line over... Is that a flat?! Yes. No? Okay, let's try it again... Okay, switch songs." Amidst this confusion, chorus goes on.

The chorus combined the talents of 24 singers this year. Frank Oddo, moderator, was excited when five males joined the baritone section. With the male voices, they can sing more of a variety of songs. Included in the chorus repertoire was "Memories," an easy rock song, "Always on My Mind," a pop song, and "Johnah," a Gospel song.

Chorus' performances included a small act in the Varsity Show and Christmas caroling. Over Christmas vacation, the chorus went to the Retirement Inn in Campbell, San Jose Retirement Home, and Veteran's Hospital to brighten up the patient's holidays.

On campus, they were involved in liturgies, and attended many of the same events as the stage and concert bands.

"Chorus is not exactly a class; it is something that you look forward to," said Coleen Shanahan, a junior.

"A mutual feeling of togetherness and unity brings all of the different parts of the music together," explained Molly Mazur, a sophomore.

onjour, hola, and guten abend are greetings of far off and exotic places, but why leave the country to see these sights and meet the people when a quick trip to the International or Culture Club will suffice.

Both of these organizations bring to the Mitty community an international flavor that provides members with an understanding and appreciation of the world around them. It also offers them the opportunity to display their heritage.

"The Culture Club gives the students the opportunity to express themselves and to acknowledge their backgrounds," explained Josie Reguero, moderator.

Reguero evoked this pride in heritage through a series of feast days including Italian Day in November, German Day in December, Oriental Day in January, Martin Luther King Day in March, and finally Cinco de Mayo. Days like the German feast day give the students and faculty a real taste of foreign lands.

While the first food day was not as great a success as was hoped, it did not discourage the club from continuing with their plans for future feast days.

"Just because the first wasn't as successful as we would have liked, it doesn't mean we're not going to keep trying," remarked

Reguero confidently.

With the money raised from these activities, the club hoped to take a trip to the beach sometime in May. This trip, however, was not the prime motivation for doing a good job.

"I am involved with this club because it gives me a sense of responsibility and a knowledge of the foods and customs of different countries, and that's valuable," explained Akiko Murphy, treasurer.

Many students this year found themselves asking, "what's the real difference between the International and Culture Clubs?" At last the question is answered.

"The Culture Club plans all the activities around a particular day, whereas our club (the International Club) is more international. We do not zero in on specific days," explained Sally Edgecumbe, International Club moderator.

As in any organization, fundraising is a crucial element. While candy and bake sales were an important part of the campaign to raise money for the group, the production of Melicerte, a French play performed entirely in French, was the major fundraising event. Members of the club such as Vice President Mark Leary, played major roles in the production along with other members of French III and IV.

"It's a challenge especially if you don't know French, but it's fun," remarked Leary.

With monies raised, a scholarship was established and trips to local restaurants were planned.

Through the year, both clubs provided the student body with an international mystique and offered a variety of activities allowing students to cross borders without leaving the campus.

“I

t was a religious retreat, a summer camp, and a trip around the world, all combined into a one week excursion in the Santa Cruz mountains,” explained Robert Gardner who was a representative at the 1983 Living in Faith’s Experience Retreat.

During the week at Camp Corralitos, the LIFE community learned leadership and communication skills through a series of activities which brought the group closer together.

The representatives from eight schools throughout California and Hawaii went on LIFE so that they could return to their schools and act as Christian role models.

“It was difficult saying goodbye,” verified Jill Walker. “But we knew that we had to spread our knowledge and love with the Mitty community.”

The LIFE representatives succeeded in their task. Working closely with Campus Ministry, the students used their leadership and communication skills to lead retreats.

One characteristic the group brought to Mitty was affirmation. Although these students have been associated with the stereotype of, “those people who go around hugging everybody,” they feel that they have helped Mitty to be a place where people are free to express themselves.

The LIFE participants felt that they are

The C in CSF not only stands for California, it stands for community.

To encourage students to become more involved in the community, CSF required a minimum of ten hours of community service per semester. Each member could choose the service most interesting to them. Some tutored, others were TAs. President Theresa Banchemo and Vice-President Lori Weichenthal volunteered a weekend at Camp Costanoan, a camp for the handicapped sponsored by the Crippled Children's Society of Santa Clara.

Senior Lupita Velez was a volunteer at the Berryessa Branch Library once a week.

"It was really quiet, my sister and I were looking for lost books . . . and one of the bookends fell and all the books fell off the shelf. Everything got out of order," Velez recalled an embarrassing moment.

The requirement brought a number of changes. Previously, over one hundred members claimed membership in CSF. This past year membership dropped approximately half.

"There is a direction this year. Before there had never been any goals set," replied Monica Scully. "Students knew they must fulfill the requirement or lose their standing in the club."

By changing its goals, CSF made its members more community aware. These students did more than just homework.

o most, skiing, biking, and back-packing are just recreational activities. For the members of Shared Adventures, they offer a chance to work and learn with disabled youth.

Shared Adventures, co-founded by Gary Cramton, is a California-based outdoor program which matches disabled youth with high school students from Mitty, Jefferson, and Athenian high schools. The partners participate in recreational activities including cross-country skiing, tandem biking, kayak tour-adventure, ropes course experiences, and backpacking.

A core group of about 15 students made up the branch of Shared Adventures at Mitty. All felt it was a worthwhile experience.

"You learn about other people and how to work together," exclaimed senior Oscar Vera. For Vera, the most important lesson was the need for trust.

"The disabled kids have so much trust in you that you figure that you can extend that same trust to them," he stated.

One task students participated in strengthening bounds of trust was a "trust walk." Members were blind-folded and disabled youths led them along trails while telling them about the surrounding environment. Senior Misty Hunter found such activities educational because she learned her own limitations and discovered "the amazing abilities of handicapped people."

Hunter felt the most outstanding part of the program, however, was being involved in difficult situations where "you have to depend on help from others." At the ropes course at La Honda, she was faced with obstacles she had never faced before.

"When you have to confront a new situation, it is much easier to do it when you have support from others," commented Hunter.

Still another experience in Shared Adventures was the cross-country ski trip. High school students provided assistance to the disabled in learning how to ski and then acted as guides for the cross-country tracks.

"The ski trips are a lot of fun and a great learning experience. Often the guides are learning at the same time that the handicapped students are," stated junior Mary Neves. She felt the ski trip especially provided a feeling of community and closeness which she found "exciting."

"Shared Adventures programs tend to create an atmosphere where cooperation is possible and sharing is possible," noted Cramton.

In doing so, the project provides benefits both to disabled youth and high school volunteers, for it gives them the chance "to explore our abilities and the capabilities of others," summarized Hunter.

Student Government

For the past three years Student Government has been directed by Michael Fallon. It has gone from a loose organization to an orderly one. This past year all changes were given a successful run.

Last year various changes and re-evaluations took place. The meeting schedule was restructured and organizational charts were established so members knew exactly where they fit in.

If anyone walked into room 502 any day of the week during fifth period, they would encounter the hustle and bustle of student government, people scuttling from one side of the room to another, and hear the chattering din of people proposing their ideas and giving their opinions. What took place went beyond an ordinary general education class. The planning of activities and decisions on how they should run were made after school.

Each ASB member had a particular job to carry out so activities moved smoothly. The president, Michelle Sanchez, kept order. She set the direction of the council. Other officers were in charge of various committees. Sanchez was chairperson of the President’s Council which dealt with issues related to the school’s philosophy, administration, and the school. Activities Director Michael Fallon discusses ticket procedures for the Greg Kihn concert with Jill Pittenger (left).

Carnations were the usual flower of the popular Send-A-Flower Days.

President, was chairperson of Special Affairs which was in charge of Homecoming, Send-A-Flower days, and other activities which arose. Tiffany Owen, chairperson of Communications and Secretary, worked mostly through homeroom, faculty, administration, and students. Financial Aspects was chaired by Treasurer Brenda Broadus, and Spirit Commissioners Dave Kurze and Jim Kyle made sure rallies were successful.

New committees have entered the scene over the past two years. The Graphics Committee added quality to the art work student government produced. AMHS ASB Productions was the Entertainment Committee in charge of bands, DJs, and rock concerts.

A new phase progressed with student government. It membered sixty people with about three representatives per homeroom. Forty-one members of student government were elected, while the other nineteen members were appointed. "We're building a tree system or a network which has Student Government officers at the top, but eventually spreads out so that everyone can be involved in Student Government," stated Fallon.

For Sanchez, student government was a highly positive aspect of the Mitty community. "It's a good feeling being a part of a group that works together and gets things accomplished," she said. Working to make Mitty the best it can be was a challenge student government did not take lightly.

Student government is a big entity at Mitty. It comprises at least one-third of the activities happening on the Mitty campus.

"I think we have an unknown member on Student Government, that is the Lord," believes Fallon, "I think the accomplishments of the program speaks for itself over the last two years."

hat's the most important thing that's hit our campus this year? FBLA is, of course, according to club moderator and business teacher, Billie Spence. Future Business Leaders of America, a struggling new club, had managed to generate enough support to hold an attention-grabber a day at the De Anza Flea Market.

"One day in my Accounting class," commented Peggy Ervin, co-moderator, "I was telling my students about the flea market. Well, at the time, some items were being hauled into the classroom. When the students saw them, they started inquiring about prices, etc. So I immediately began auctioning off things. From there, they began to out-bid each other, yelling back and forth. Pretty soon, I was selling junk that I would have sold for $1 for $5 or $6. The kids were really getting into it."

On a more serious side of things, FBLA is a structured, organized club with several officers to keep it that way. When a new FBLA chapter is started, an existing division must formally acknowledge and initiate this new club.

"The initiation went very well," said Spence. "It included a candlelight ceremony." Yet, even though the ceremony was formal, the club members managed to have fun. "One thing that we noticed was that the other clubs had a lot of girls, whereas we have quite a few guys in ours," recalled Ervin. "We are really pleased over that, needless to say the guys were really pleased also."

Said Spence, "We've gotten off to a good start and we're going to work hard to keep it that way."

the Math Team, of course.

The Math Team is an organization which focuses on preparing advanced math students for competition in national, state and county tests. Each member prepares for these competitive matches on his own time.

All eighteen member of the team took the six California Mathematics League Tests which are offered in the Math Lab. However, most members found the Santa Clara University Math Test and the Santa Clara Field Day the most enjoyable. These exams, held at San Jose University, involved face to face competition between Mitty and other schools in the Santa Clara Valley.

"The competition at these tests helped me assimilate the math I have learned and they are a lot of fun," revealed Kevin Smith.

"Math Team has helped me prepare for other tests and I think it will be of great value to me in college," explained Noel Charitat, a member of the Math Team for four years.

"It is a chance to apply what I have learned, gain some new knowledge, and have some fun, all at the same time," summarized Charitat.

ust as NASA prepares for the final touchdown of Columbia, similarly the yearbook staff prepares for their final product: the 1984 EXCALIBUR.

"It's an excellent class where you learn to work together towards a common goal," stated Lori Weichenthal, "giving one the opportunity to contribute to Mitty by recording that year." For many students, yearbook was an opportunity to meet new people. For others, like Paula Calderon, Organizations Section Editor, "It provides a chance to perfect my creative writing style and analyze things in more depth."

The staff was picked, trained, and ready to work before school even began. They held numerous meetings over summer vacation to prepare for the year, and most attended a seminar at Stanford University in July.

The seminar proved to be profitable. Additional skills were gained and the staff got to know one another. Several awards were won. The 1983 EXCALIBUR received a first class rating from the National Scholastic Press Association at the University of Minnesota and garnered a second place from the Columbia School of Journalism. Seniors Theresa Banchemo, copy editor, Calderon, and Editor Michelle Doyle took first, third and fifth place, respectively, in the writing categories at the Stanford seminar. They faced competition from a dozen other schools. Junior Jessica Lopez Mitty also took the Grand Sweepstakes Trophy at Stanford for best school based on participation and overall performance in layout, writing, and style.

The greatest goal of the entire staff is a constant surpassing of each previous yearbook. House is aiming for a miniature "masterpiece."

— Patricia Curran —

"They are a hardworking group as a whole. We have some dedicated veterans and several enthusiastic, energetic new staff members" stated Linda Ferrante, moderator of The Lion's Roar.

Ferrante, who has been the moderator of the newspaper for four years, had not always been interested in journalism. Now, after the time spent with the newspaper, she could not give it up. She enjoyed directing The Lion's Roar and believed there was a sense of dedication in the staff.

The staff, too, was serious about their work on the paper. Considering the production time they had, The Lion's Roar staff believed it was a good paper.

"The student body is a little too critical of it," said Mike O'Connor, junior. As Ferrante noted, the students did not realize what went into the production of a paper.

"I get really uptight when the production deadlines near and I think the staff is often frustrated..." commented Ferrante. She noted that students would have understood if they had had the experience of journalism.

The Lion's Roar hoped for a great year with one paper a month. Despite the pressures of deadlines and production, the staff and moderator felt they would reach their goals.

ake seventy-two poles and skis, thirty-six students, one chemistry teacher, and a deck of cards, put them in a bus, and what do you have? A Mitty ski trip.

The slopes of Squaw Valley were invaded by members of the ski club during the last week of December. Besides skiing, the trip provided students with a chance to socialize outside the boundaries of school.

"You have all your buddies with you and there are eight to ten people in a room," commented Dave Rosendin, "It's mass chaos, but fun."

Moderator Dave Kassler agrees the time away from the classroom enables him to relate to students on a different level. "It gives me a way of getting to know students outside of class. . . It also gives them a chance to see there's something human about me which they don't see in class."

The average schedule of daily events included breakfast, consisting of scrambled eggs and french fries at the Squaw Valley Lodge, followed by a day of skiing, ending with a cozy evening indoors.

When they were not on their skis, they were in the snow, whether it was building a snowman or just having a snowball fight. "At one point there were six of us against at least fifty other people from another school," recalls Rosendin.

Although much of the fun occurred on the slopes, the bus ride was equally as fun. Thirty-six high school students in closed quarters will eventually come up with various ways to amuse themselves on their way to Lake Tahoe. "A lot of the kids had their walkmans on," remarked Kassler, "Some of us passed the time playing cards in the aisle."

The ski trips are the high point of the club's activities. Although every trip has its intended purpose, each one is unique in fun and fellowship.

ests, quizzes, regular class days, and assignments; to many students these words evoke images of a math or English course. For the spirit leaders it was all part of their final class of the day.

The spirit leaders consisted of four squads: Varsity Song Girls, Varsity Cheerleaders, Varsity Flag Girls, and Junior Varsity Cheerleaders. But something highlighted and complimented these organizations. It was the frolicking Monarch feline brought to life on the sidelines by Misty Hunter, junior.

Because spirit involvement goes beyond normal school hours, course expectations have added demands. Squads are responsible for writing thank you's and serving at various banquets. Preparation for spirit activities began with one week at the U.S.A. Camp in Santa Barbara, primarily to build squad unity and organization. Work began early for the spirit leaders, but for Dana Grewohl there was an additional obstacle. Being one of the new members she had to conquer her anxiety of being "the new kid."

"It was hard because everyone knew each other. I just sat in the corner of the room," remarked Grewohl, "then it just clicks and everyone gets close. They are like your sisters."

"I really enjoy witnessing their personal growth, accomplishments, and self satisfaction," commented Debbie Rocha, Moderator. Rocha ultimately described herself as an "overgrown cheerleader."

Just like any other organization, Rocha and the spirit leaders had their share of memorable experiences. "I can remember going to Sacred Heart for a workshop," recalled Rocha, "It's an all boys school and when we walked through, the entire squad stopped." There are also hardships that go along with being a spirit leader, like when a game is lost or pom-poms are forgotten. "You can't stop, you have to keep the crowd up," remarked Gina Gemma, Varsity Cheerleader. "It's a real responsibility; if you forget your pom-poms, it sets the entire squad back," added Tina George, Head Varsity Song Girl.

A lot is expected of the spirit leaders, not just in class, but outside as well. They all have different tasks, but they seem to share one feeling. "Often you ask yourself, why am I doing this? Then you think of the friendships and accomplishments you've made," concluded Donna Kufer, Varsity Flag Girl.

he Block M was one of Mitty's better clubs, because it allowed students, even though they didn't participate in sports, to help raise funds for a better sports program,” remarked Tiffany Owen, a senior member of the club.

Members were involved in service-oriented activities. These activities ranged from concession sales at sports events, to major fundraising sales; promoting school spirit and community involvement.

The club, under the supervision of coordinators Anne Egan and Pat Ersepske, worked to help finance the sports programs and create unity among all of teams.

Five committees were organized to help the club run smoothly and in an orderly fashion. One committee, in charge of fundraising, raised money for better equipment, new uniforms, and renovations of the playing fields. Another committee, responsible for publicity took advantage of Mitty's E.T.V. system, and put together a unique and informative commercial taken in Downtown San Jose and shown to the entire school during the homeroom period.

Ersepske and Egan hoped that involving the boys in the club would be a huge benefit over last year's G.A.A., because girls and boys worked together to support the ath-

"The speech team is off to slow start, but I think as a club it has a large amount of potential," stated Victor Pekarcik, team member, "Through time, with the help of the students it will become an important part of Mitty, similar to the Academic Decathlon."

The formation of a forensics team has long been discussed, but this year it was finally initiated. The need for such a team originated in a discussion with the scholarship committee.

"We (Mitty) have a responsibility to our students to provide them with the opportunity to be trained if they have the ability," stated Bernie LeRoy, head of the scholarship committee.

Students realize the need for oral communication skills. "It develops the ability to speak in front of a large group and it enhances one's character," commented Cheryl Clinton. These oratorical skills enable a strong edge in competitions for scholarships and contests, successful job interviews, and improving one's image.

"It builds character that without practice remains undeveloped," said Rosie Dorsey. Dorsey visualizes her role as an instructor to guide students in oratorical presentations.

The team took a field trip to UC Berkeley and watched the speech competition at various levels. Dorsey and her team plan to participate in a novice tournament in April. From there, the group plans to be involved in varied competitions such as local and individual tournaments as the program is more fully developed.

Closing pages

Hey, Yearbookers!

This is it. The final elbow, the last macaw, the end of Rico. We've got to come up with one of those slam-bang finishes. Nothing extravagant, just something equal to the Second Coming in impact.

The last three pages are the closing pages wherein we reintroduce the book's theme and tie it up neatly and succinctly. Actually, right now I'd settle for either one because deadline is five days away, and a lot of half-baked ideas are starting to sound good to me. Which is why I'm soliciting your help because just about the last thing we need are ideas birthed out of paranoia and general instability.

What defines Mitty? I've got some thoughts, but what do you think? Collect some pictures we haven't used and look for something that captures the essence of this school (I'm not asking much). If you find something, give it to me with a little note explaining why, in twenty-five words or less, you think this defines us (why do I feel a sudden compulsion to add "and two boxtops from your favorite cereal"?).

All entries will be viewed separately and the winner receives a red rose or a trip to Rome, whichever is cheaper. Don't forget: this isn't for me or for you, it's for the school. Or, if it'll make you think better, it's for you, and we'll pretend otherwise if you win.

Yours in Yearbook,

The Guy Who Runs Things Here
The Guy Who Runs Things Here

Uncle Jeffy... I love it! Take a peek at this one. Talk about community involvement... Brandy's father sent her flowers on the first day of "Sweet Charity" how sweet. Parent involvement really makes it special. The community benefited from their talents through sheer entertainment. This interaction is essential and truly defines Mitty - Tina

House,
I think this would be a great picture "defining" Mitty. It shows the involvement between students and teachers which is such a necessary part of the community. It also shows the intensity which is put into sports and other activities at this school. What do you think? - Lori

Mr. House,
 student teacher relationships.
 The faculty is willing to "take time out" to help students and be there when they need them. They share the same ideas as students, but because of experience and wisdom, they influence us. It's not just an 8:00 to 2:45 job.

Jeff,
 This is it!!! This has got to be the picture to define Mitty H.S. Just look at them. These guys are sitting around, boasting each other's confidence for the next race. Look at that spirit of!!! Now camaraderie!!!
 That defines Mitty: support, spirit & togetherness!
 Edna & Nyo

Hey, House

You're gonna love this!!! We came up with the perfect picture. Just put it on the last page with these words: "The definition is you." Considering what Mitty is made up of, I think this defines the school better than any one picture could do. All you gotta do is

Turn the page....

Mark & Monica

The definition is you

Acknowledgements

As usual, the finest of efforts are rarely accomplished alone, and we need to thank a few people. First, a number of folks donated photographs: Dave Kassler, Albert Spears, Billie Spence, Gary Cramton and Phil Sumner. George Reilly performed the monumental task of compiling 18 pages of ads. The Mitty staff was continually patient during our repeated and persistent interviews; Marty Procaccio, in particular, endured us and maintained his kindness throughout. We are also grateful to Father Rod for sharing a vision and supporting the establishment of Mitty Publications. The staff and advisor gained again from the friendship, learning and support of our publishing representative, Dave Setnick, and appreciated the assistance of photographer Mike Kohl and his staff. Parents waited forever sometimes as the staff worked late into more than one night, and we hope you see the reflection of yourselves in this effort; particularly, we thank the Birkelands and the Johnsons for the use of their homes and hearths on cold, winter nights. Cassandra Floyd donated appreciated assistance one deadline in December. And last, Mr. House wishes to express his love, respect, gratitude and admiration for the 1984 Excalibur staff. I asked them to try the difficult, and they performed the impossible. To them I dedicate this book, the loudest proclamation of their talents. Remember this always, staffers: for the rest of your lives, this annual stands as a testament to what our group love and interaction could do. You are Mitty and so much more, and I will miss you dearly.

Brian,
Have a really cool summer and keep kicking ass on those skins.
Because I want to see you on a big stage some day. Keep in touch and give me a call (265-0870)
and we will party
your friend John Dublin

Brian,
in good luck next year
you have to put up with young Robert, Larry Melman - you can learn from him - his middle name is BUD - is King
Keep drummin' James Ballas

Brian,
Even though I've made and 'intel' fun of your height, tail and 'intel' dignity I think you're a real nice guy. I also don't like you kind of music.
but you taste in the picture of know as you miss by Geometry as much as I will. Have a great summer and stay out of trouble with your buddies.

Butt!!!

Rhythm section will definitely dominate next year with you and body on drums, me on bass and Ass on piano. we can't lose.
Keeps playin' those drums, see you in showbiz.
Taz Bbb.

Brian, your are an awesome drummer but you'll never be as good as me. But who cares? We'll have a rad time raisin' hell in stage band. Of course it will all be your fault.

I said cut.

next year

Brian -
well curie - you made through a year at mitty.
Hope you had fun. It was fun having you in a class. Maybe next year we will have a class or two next year. Have a great summer and K.I.T. Don't Party too much.
Love Cindy

Brian,
you brain! I had alot of fun in Geometry. you're a cool kinda guy. You got pretty great taste in music and you know how to party. Keep it up!
Hope to see ya next year.
Have a killer summer.

Brian,
I'm alot of fun with during classes and after.
I real didn't get to know you until second semester.
Mediation was great. Hope your band does great or you get into another band that does well. I will always remember you and Chris and Eric.
Phill got bad at the end but you know how it is. I hope for your sake and your grades that you and Chris get together. "Porsche no substitute" how is that!
As About Amy or Matt says
"Oh Well" have a great summer and stay off the drugs because as you said it stunts your growth and you can't handle that.

Jay

hey Brian! history + spanish was great w/ you + i hope next year will have some more classes together.
stay sweet - good luck is always! you're drum playing is great! hope you go far w/it! take care!

Q. What are you going to do this summer?

A. Grow!!

No, really, just kidding!

I am glad you came to Mitty.
Spanish was fun & History was pretty cool. Hopefully, I will have classes with you next year! Have a great summer.

Mitty

is defined by every individual who encounters it, and every individual defines it for himself.
